PREPARATION FOR GRAFTING.

Those who contemplate using grafted stock for next season's planting should now make arrangements for the requisite supply of stocks, as it will soon be time to begin preparing these for work. The imported dormant stocks will soon be arriving and these should be potted immediately, so as to give them ample time to form good roots without having to subject them to heat before being operated on, as they are very impatient of heat when first potted.

A 2½-inch pot is usually large enough for potting Manetti, but where the roots are too large for this size a little judicious root pruning does no harm. After potting firmly after the usual manner of potting any other rose, they should be watered thoroughly and placed in a house with a temperature not to exceed 35 degrees or 40 degrees, and where they will not be exposed to the full rays of the sun.

The best success I ever had with Manetti stocks was when I placed them for a few weeks in an old, disused mushroom house. This house seemed to possess about the requisite amount of moisture to keep the stocks in good condition till root action had commenced.

They require little watering between the time they are potted and the time they are required for use. Syringe them overhead occasionally to keep the bark in good condition. By this method they will form nice, fibrous roots, ready to go to work on the first application of heat, while the eyes will remain unbroken.

To the care bestowed on them during this period can be ascribed a good part of the success or failure of the grafting operation, as it is obvious that a stock having just the requisite flow of sap to sustain the scion must be more suited to its purpose than stocks with either too much or too little.

Grafting operations usually do not begin until after the holidays, so I will reserve my remarks on this method of propagation till that season. RIBES.

CLIMBING ROSE TAUSENDSCHON.

This beautiful climbing rose is the result of several crosses between the well-known Crimson Rambler with tea and polyantha roses. It surpasses all existing sorts of its section concerning growth, foliage and beauty of blooms. The stems are nearly (sometimes entirely) thornless, of much stronger growth than Crimson Rambler, with shining green foliage. The flowers appear from the beginning of June till the end of July, in large, loose clusters. Each individual flower is in shape like a balsam flower, measuring more than one inch in diameter. When beginning to bloom they show a lovely soft pink color; later on the somewhat curled petals assume a carmine rose color, when in full bloom giving the appearance of two different varieties. For floral work Tausendschon is very useful. Further important is its hardiness and its being almost impervious to mildew. It was raised by J. C. Schmidt, Erfurt, Germany.

PLACE FOR THERMOMETER.

Will you kindly inform me whether it is proper to hang a thermometer in the sun or shade to go by in a rose-house? Also what temperature is needed to grow Bride and Bridesmaid roses. I. R.

The main object to be attained in hanging a thermometer in a house is that it shall act as an indicator of the true temperature of the body of air contained therein, and consequently it should be so placed where it will best effect the purpose. Placing an instrument in a shady corner would only show the temperature of that particular place and not the temperature of the house which is desired.

By hanging an instrument where it would be exposed to the direct rays of the sun would also make it no true indicator, as the tube and metal would be heated far above the house temperature. The instrument should be hung in an open-faced box with its back towards the sun.

The temperature best suited for Brides and Bridesmaids is 56 degrees to 58 degrees at night, allowing it to run up to 75 degrees or 80 degrees in the day, according to intensity of sunshine. During cloudy weather the day temperature should range from 60 degrees to 65 degrees under ordinary conditions.

RIBES.

SPIDER AND MILDEW.

I am enclosing some rose foliage and would like you to tell me what is wrong with my plants. They seem quite green and in good health, but as soon as I touch a plant the foliage seems to drop off, leaving the branches bare; and the growths seem to die at the points. I used the best of sod, piling it up early in the spring, a layer of sod and then a layer of cow manure, leaving it until it was well rotted. Please tell me what to do. M. E. A.

This method of forwarding for examination flowers and leaves by mail is unsatisfactory, as they usually arrive in such a dried-up condition that they are useless for the purpose, and this case is no exception to the rule.

The most probable cause of this trouble is a sudden check, either to root action or a heavy chill to the foliage, in all probability the latter, from the evidence to be obtained from the accompanying letter.

By a careful examination of the leaves I cannot find any trace of disease, but there are indisputable evidences of both red spider and mildew. In order to restore these plants to health great care must be taken in watering until good root action is again established, running them rather on the dry side for a week or two, but keep the syringe going on every bright forenoon.

Keep a steady night temperature of 56 degrees or 58 degrees, with a day temperature of from 60 degrees during cloudy weather up to 80 degrees during bright sun, giving ventilation whenever possible. Do not attempt to feed until the plants have recovered and be careful not to fumigate heavily. RIBES.

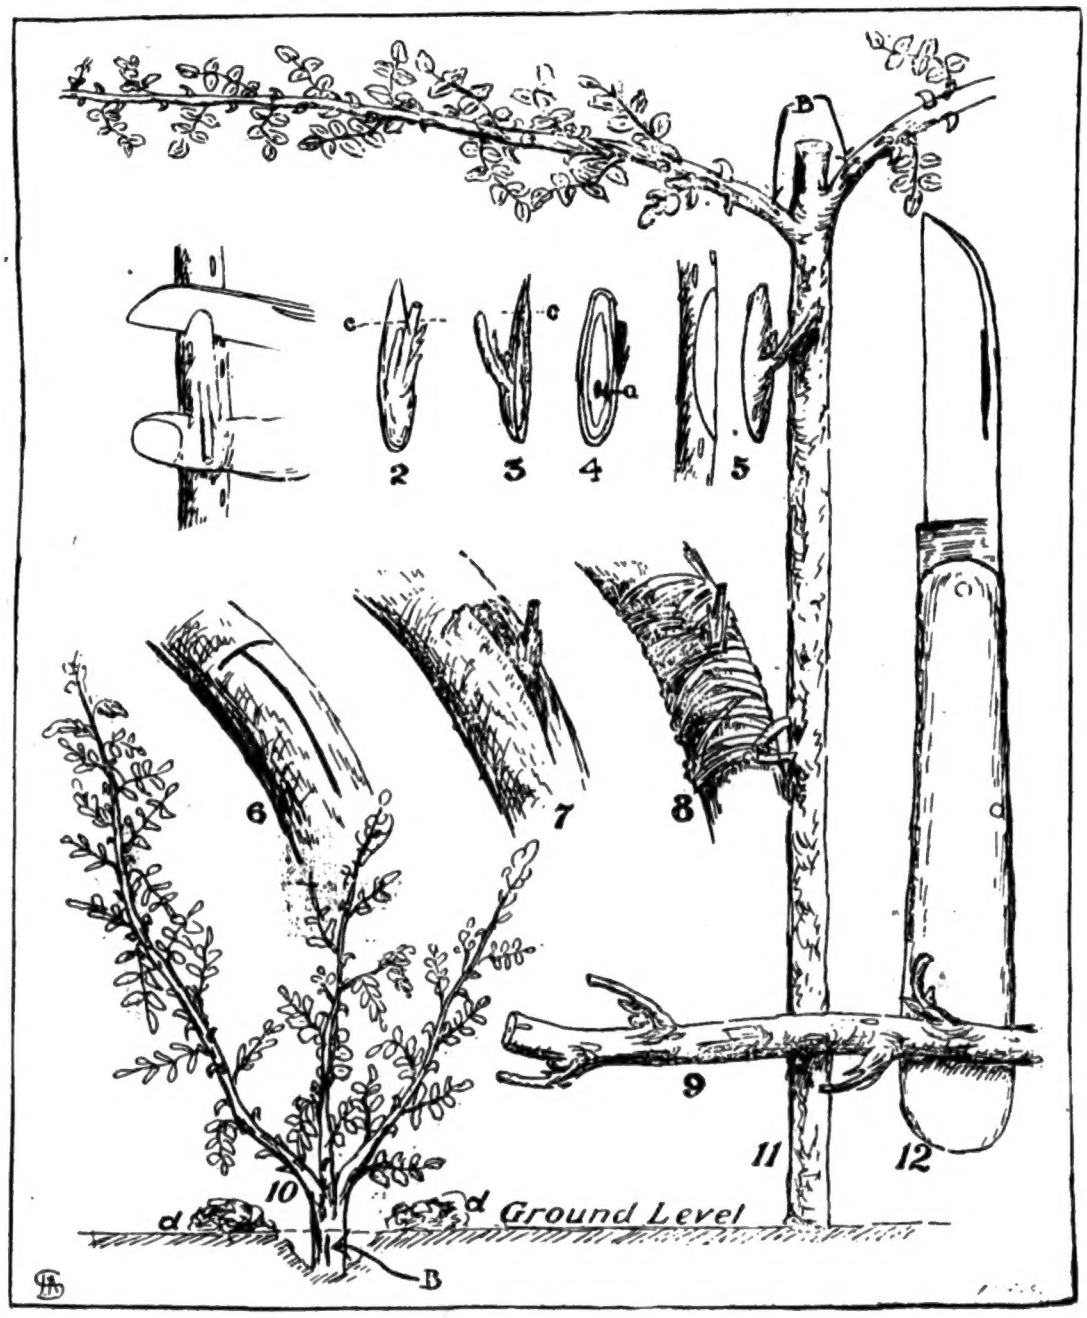
TROUBLE WITH KILLARNEY.

Enclosed I send you some leaves of Killarney rose. I would like to know if this is a disease or natural with this rose at this time of year. They are losing all the leaves except the young growth, which is rather weak. I had an attack of black-spot on all the roses on a bench planted with Beauty, Killarney, General MacArthur, Bride and Golden Gate. They all grew strong and healthy, especially Killarney, until this disease attacked them. The genuine black-spot, as I know it, with a big, dark spot on the leaves, soon disappeared after I treated them according to your prescription, but the Killarney keep losing their leaves, some when green, but most turn yellow. The root seems healthy and thick netted in the ground. Can a big elm tree growing next to the house, which seems to be full of black-spot, be the cause of this disease? The leaves were continually blowing onto the roses through the ventilators. A week before the roses went back on me I gave them a half-inch mulching, half clay soil and cow manure sifted, a little slaked lime and wood ashes, about half gallon of each to 300 square feet. The roses are almost too willing to make flower buds on the many weak sprouts. Would it be best to pinch those off? My idea has been to let them have it their own way till some change for the better appears. J. N.

When these leaves reached me they were so dried up that it was impossible to diagnose the case from any evidence they could supply.

Killarney has a habit of shedding the older foliage during the late fall, and especially is this the case when root action is checked by any cause. The most common cause of this is allowing the temperature to get low during the night, when the condensation settles on the leaves. This variety seems even more susceptible to trouble from this source than any other variety I know. Mulching during dark weather, or when the plants are not strong enough to have filled the bench with roots, might also arrest root action and bring about the same results.

I do not think the elm leaves would have any injurious effects on the foliage, but it is best to at all times keep the surface of the soil clean.



Wood ashes is a very concentrated form of food and should be applied sparingly, especially to young plants, and could not have been necessary when applying a rich mulch of half an inch in thickness. Feed rather more sparingly until after the short days are over. Light and frequent feeding is much safer than big doses at long intervals.

HOW TO BUD ROSES.

Assuming the bark is in good condition, it is essential to remove all thorns from the stock around the point where the new bud is to be inserted. Standard or half standard briars must be budded as close to the base of the shoot as possible (B) and dwarfs about an inch below the ground line (10). Having prepared the stocks, select and trim a branch of the rose you wish to propagate (9), and with a sharp budding knife (12) cut out a bud as shown at 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. The bit of wood attached to the inside of the shield, or bark of the cut-out bud must be removed. In practice it is found best to hold the base of the shoot away from you when removing the bud, and cut towards you, but to remove the wood from the bud a sharp pull is necessary in the opposite direction to the cut, holding the shield in the left hand and removing the wood with the right. If in bringing away this bit of wood a hole is left in the shield, then the bud has been pulled out and is useless. Having successfully removed the wood, trim the upper part of the shield, as shown at C. Then place the bud in the mouth to keep it moist while a T-shaped incision (6) is made in the stock; the edges of the cut are raised with the thin end of the knife handle, the bud inserted (7) and tied in with raffia (8). The process is simple enough, says the Gardeners' Magazine, but, like many other simple operations, must be performed with care. Remember that practice makes perfect. Allow the base of the leaf stalk to remain, as it serves as a handle for the bud and materially facilitates the work in hand.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

MUMS OUTDOORS.

Why do my chrysanthemums wilt the second day after cutting? I cut late in the afternoon, and plunge them in water for twelve hours. The next day they wilt. These are outdoor grown single stems.

When is the best time to take the bud on mums growing for exhibition? They must be ready by the last of October.

Please give me the best of directions for growing single-stemmed mums in pots for exhibition purposes, also to be ready by last of October. When should I take the cuttings, and in what size pot would they show off best in the exhibition? F. S.

I would say that the cause of the flower wilting is its inability to take up water through the stem. The reason for this I could not say unless I saw the stems, but in all probability it is because the stem has become too hard. This may be helped by splitting up the stem and then if the flowers are placed in water in such a position that the stems are standing straight up I see no reason why the water should not be taken up. It does happen sometimes that if flowers are cut in a half developed state that they wilt down, but I assume that F. S. knows when his flowers are ready to cut.

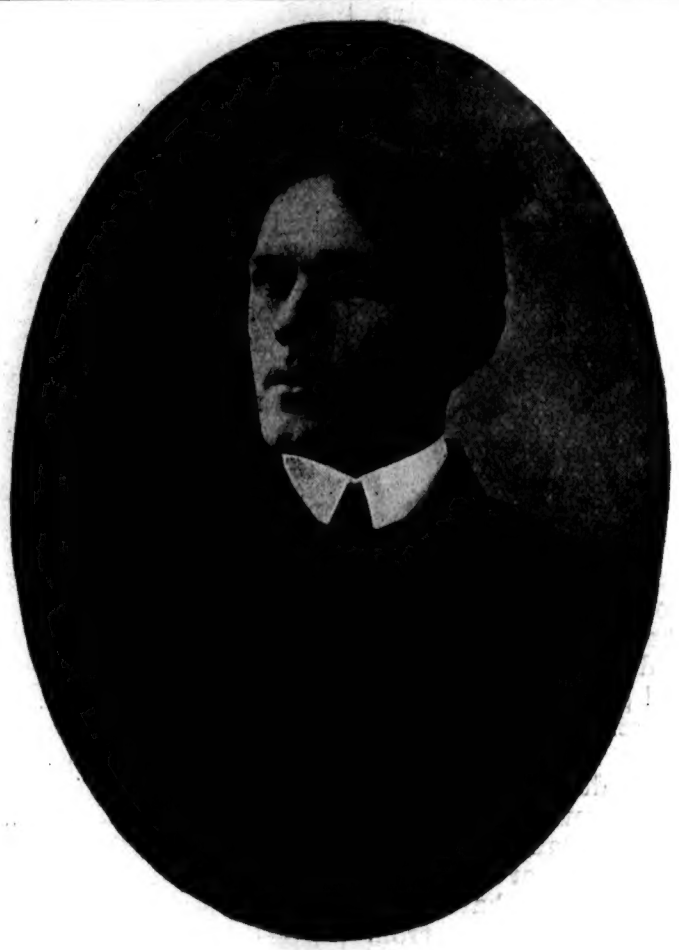
The best time with us in the east for taking buds is from August 15 onwards in order to get the largest flowers. Later buds produce smaller flowers.

Single-stemmed plants grown for exhibition and flowered in 6-inch pots should be rooted at the end of May or early in June, grown right along in pots and never allowed to suffer for want of water or nourishment. I believe 6-inch pots nearly always are used for flowering this type of plant. F. S. will find explicit directions on how to grow pot plants in Herrington's chrysanthemum book. C. H. T.

THRIPS.

I enclose some chrysanthemum foliage with insects on the back. Please tell me what it is and how to get rid of it.

M. E. A.



The insects belong to the numerous family of thrips and with the flowers developed there is nothing much that can be done to clean them out at this time. Another year I would suggest that M. E. A. syringe his foliage underneath frequently and this will prevent the thrips from getting such a foothold.

NEW CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

At the meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club, evening of November 6, there was a beautiful display of chrysanthemums, both from home and distant growers. Prominent among them stood a group of new varieties from the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind. So fine were these that a special committee was appointed to report on them, John W. Jones, the president of the club, being chairman. The other members were P. S. Randolph, Robert Chive and William Falconer.

Grandest of all the blooms was Destroyat, a large pale pink, which lights up beautifully at night. Mr. Randolph declared it is the best pink chrysanthemum he ever saw. Others were: Mme. L. Roussel, incurved golden bronze, large and full, one of the finest of its color;

G. W. Renard.

Mme. J. Rivol, a bronzy pink, large, full and solid, a good commercial flower; M. Pechow, a golden yellow, full open flower, good for private growers; Mrs. Geo. Beach, incurved golden yellow, full and fine, reminding of Bonnaffon; M. Georges Truffant, clear yellow, incurved, full, fine commercial or otherwise, paler in color, but style of Bonnaffon; Marie Viullmermet, clear, pure white, somewhat flat, suggestive of Silver Wedding, but larger; Dubuisson Foubert, warm yellow, large, full, paler than, but suggestive of, Golden Wedding, fine for private growers: Mlle. Suzanne Gauthiers, white, reflexed narrow petals, but globular shaped head, later than the others; Beatrice May, pure white, large and full, fine stem and good foliage; Amateur Consiel, a fine, bold, velvety crimson, full headed flower with excellent stem.

JOHN W. JONES.

THE EXTREMES.

Please state what is the earliest and also the latest commercial chrysanthemums, and where I can get stock.

F. R.

The best late chrysanthemum, so far as my experience goes, is Chadwick. The color of this variety is a flesh white. It has also a pink and a yellow sport named W. S. Allen and Yellow Chadwick respectively. The earliest large flower, and the one that seems to give the most general satisfaction, is Monrovia, a yellow. These varieties will, I have no doubt, be easily procured from any of the advertisers of stock plants in this paper.

C. H. T.

A HOUSE OF IVORY.

G. W. Renard, at Avondale, Pa., is one of those growers who has not found anything among the later varieties of chrysanthemums to displace Ivory as a money maker. The accompanying illustration shows a house 28x100 feet, containing 6,000 plants of Ivory, grown two flowers to the plant, the house containing 12,000 blooms all in fine shape. Mr. Renard finds Ivory about the readiest seller there is for the store man with the average class of trade. It is easy to handle and always sure of a market.

Mr. Renard is a young man endowed by nature with the heavy chin denoting courage and determination. He has been exceptionally successful in his business and is steadily pushing his way to the front. He knows a good thing when he sees it and has that other, and none too common, trait of being wise enough to let well enough alone.

ANOTHER CASE OF THRIPS.

Under separate cover I send some insects of which I find lots on my chrysanthemums. Will you please tell me if these are the cause of the buds being misshapen, opening the petals only on one side? I used to have fine mums and have given them better care this year than ever, I think. I planted on solid beds this year. Is the trouble due to that, perhaps? N. N.

The thrips enclosed are the cause of the buds coming misshapen, and in some localities they do an immense amount of damage. Planting on solid beds makes no difference so far as the thrips are concerned. All beds look alike to him so long as the buds are on the plants. Spraying the plants with a solution of nicotine makes things unpleasant for this insect, but nothing is really so effective as catching them and killing them. I know this seems like a hopeless job, but perseverance will accomplish wonders.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Propagating.

To the experienced grower the propagating season does not mean any more than any other part of the growing season in so far as close attention and alertness are concerned. True, he has to be ready all the time to look after the wants of the cuttings, by spraying, shading, etc., but he has to be on hand just as steadily if he wants to grow high grade stock. It is to the beginner the propagating season means great worry and work. The experienced grower is always able to size up the situation at a glance and act accordingly, but not so with the beginner. He cannot act with the same precision, and because such irreparable damage can be done in such a short time his inexperience gives him no end of worry.

In no other department can success or failure hang in the balance as it does during this time unless it be during transplanting in the fall. An hour of hot sunshine, or a drying draught, or water standing on the foliage over night may ruin a batch of cuttings beyond repair, and any one of them is likely to happen to the inexperienced who has not the foresight to guard against them.

The propagating season is rapidly approaching, and judging from numerous inquiries there are many beginners who are reading the Review for their daily guidance, so I will in the next few numbers confine my notes to this subject and try to cover it as fully as possible.

As I said in a recent issue, it is yet a little early to begin propagating your general stock of carnations. As most beginners are likely to propagate only for their own use, I would say wait another month before putting any cuttings in the sand. You can then get an abundance of cuttings and can put enough in sand in one batch to give you all you will need. Many of the rooted cutting specialists begin by the middle of November, but we do not consider these extremely early cuttings as desirable, generally speaking, as those taken out of the sand during February and March. Not that they will not make splendid plants, but they are likely to become a burden to the grower before spring.

One rule that must be strictly adhered to is to keep the young plants growing after they are once potted up, and repotting must be done whenever the plants need it. Few growers feel able to spare more room than a 3-inch pot requires, and in case of strong-growing varieties these early cuttings are likely to become crowded, drawn and stunted unless shifted into a larger size. But a cutting taken late in December of any variety I know can be grown in a 3-inch pot until May without becoming stunted.

You need not be idle in the meantime, however. You should get things in shape so that when you begin putting in cuttings you can stay at it and get them into the sand without delay. Get your sand on the place and protect it from severe freezing, so that it can be handled at any time. Either river or pit sand will do, just so it is clean. I have used sand of every degree of coarseness, from small pebbles to lake sand almost like dust and have found that good success can be had with all of them if handled accordingly. Coarse sand must be watered more frequently than the finer grades, while in the finer grades the danger of fungus is greater. The easiest to handle is a clean, sharp sand of medium grade. It will pack readily and, while it will hold moisture fairly well, it will not easily become soggy. Keep all loam and trash of any kind excluded from it.

Perhaps you have a propagating house, built for that purpose. If so you will not need to make any preparations along that line, but if you have not you need not be worried. Any bench that can be easily shaded, and which is so situated that you can keep strong draughts from striking it, will answer the purpose. For instance, if you have an even-span house and a narrow bench against the north wall it will make a first-class propagating bench.

Get some muslin wide enough to reach from the rafters below the edge of the bench and tack it to each rafter. When the sun is shining you merely let down this curtain to keep it off the cuttings, and at the same time they will have the full daylight. In the evening you tie it up and leave it up on cloudy days. This curtain also will be a great help in keeping off draughts.

Good, sound boards will do for sides and bottom and should be whitewashed each time the sand is changed, to prevent fungus, etc. The boards should not be too tight, but tight enough to hold damp sand from sifting through. Special propagating benches are built with brick bottoms, and those who use them speak very highly of them. Instead of using boards for the bottom use 2x4 and place far enough apart so that a brick laid flat and crossways of the bench will reach from the middle of one 2x4 to the middle of the next. Then cover the whole bottom with bricks, laying them flat and edge against edge. For the legs and crosspieces you can use whatever material you deem best, but of course it pays to use iron or cedar as much as possible. One always wishes he had when it becomes necessary to renew the benches. Always bear in mind that cleanliness is essential in propagating.

SYRINGED ON WET DAY.

We syringed our carnations freely and it turned out to be a nasty day. We fired up heavily, but allowed the entrance of some fresh air all night, keeping the temperature at about 56 degrees. Would it have been better to run the temperature up to 65 or 70 degrees to dry out the air? A. R. & S.

You did the proper thing in handling your carnation house, and no harm should result from the experience they went through. You might have dropped a pinch of sulphur here and there on one of the pipes to help dry up the atmosphere and check any disease, such as leaf-spot, from starting. To have shut up the house tight and run the temperature way up would have been a mistake. Unless you ran it up to near 80 degrees it would not have dried up the moisture any quicker, and that would have been entirely too hot for the plants and much more favorable to leaf-spot, which revels in a humid atmosphere. Sixty-five to 70 degrees is all right as a day temperature for Queen Louise and Mrs. Lawson, with two inches or more of air on. This would be entirely too warm at night; 55 degrees at night is warm enough to stop any trouble that may result from low temperature, such as bursting the calyx, etc. Maintaining an even temperature will really do more along that line than a high temperature will. Avoid extremes and fluctuations in temperature. A. F. J. B.

BACTERIOSIS.

My carnations are healthy, with the exception of some leaves which are covered with light-colored streaks and blotches. Some plants are full, especially on the younger and softer shoots. It started with the Lawson family, but is now seen on the Enchantress. Have not observed it on the other varieties. The plants were housed August 15 and have grown nicely and have borne nice blooms. The soil is not rich, but we are now putting on a mulch of rotten cow and horse manure mixed. The soil is a light, sandy loam, was piled up last fall with about one-sixth manure. The plants are well-rooted through the entire soil, which is on wooden benches and about four and one-half inches deep.

E. A. M.

What is the cause of the white spots shown on the carnation foliage enclosed? I housed my plants in good shape September 1. The compost is a medium dark clay soil, with both cow and horse manure added. They have been well ventilated and well cared for and have grown nicely. T. E. M.

The trouble in each case is what was formerly termed bacteriosis, but which has later been changed to stigmonose. Prof. Woods in a paper read before the American Carnation Society some years ago declared that this trouble is caused invariably by the punctures of insects, such as greenfly, thrips, etc., and that if you will keep your plants entirely free from these pests you will have no trouble along that line. That such spots are produced by these pests I do not doubt for an instant, but that they are the only cause of them I am not ready to admit. I have always entertained the idea that oftentimes this breaking down of the cells may be caused by improper nourishment of the plants. A lack of scientific botanical knowledge prevents me from carrying on any elaborate experiments to determine the correctness of this theory, but nevertheless it has clung to me and I am not ready at this time to give it up.

One of the greatest obstacles in such investigation is that we can never be absolutely certain that there are not some of the pests present in the house, even though we may not be able to see them. Greenfly you can usually see by examining the plants closely, but thrips are so small and active that they may be present in considerable numbers without our knowledge. We never think to look for them unless they attack the blooms, and the idea is quite prevalent that this is the only damage they do, which of course is a mistake. While they seem to get closer to your pocketbook when they attack the blooms, yet experienced growers know how they will weaken a plant that is badly infested.

We have had varieties which would show this disease every winter, beginning in November and getting worse until midwinter, and after that get better, and finally by spring no trace of it could be found. In the same house would be such varieties as Mrs. Lawson and Jubilee, which were especial favorites of thrips, and these would show no signs of that pest in the blooms. Of greenfly we were positive there were none. The darker the season, the worse the disease would be. This led me to believe that in the absence of sufficient sunlight the process of building up and maintaining the plant tissue may be impaired and cause the balance between that and the root action to be disturbed, preventing the proper nourishment of the plant.

We have long ago noticed that if plants which show these spots are watered too liberally or fed very much it will aggravate the trouble. So all the advice I can give is not to push your plants too hard, but run them just a trifle on the dry side. Give them an abundance of air, as much as possible. Keep the atmosphere sweet by using sulphur and lime as recommended in these notes for leaf-spot, etc. In fact, you should encourage a moderate, well-matured, robust growth and keep them free from insects. A. F. J. B.

FEEDING.

I benched my carnations September 10 in some poor soil to which was added one-fifth cow manure. When should I begin to feed them with ground-bone and how much should I use on a bench 100 feet long and four and one-half feet wide? Should I apply any hardwood ashes and how much to a bench of the same size? A. R. W.

Whether you should give your plants any additional food, besides what the soil contained at planting time, will depend entirely on the condition of the plants. If they are nicely established and healthy and the roots have run through the soil pretty well, then a light dressing of bone and a light mulch of half rotted cow manure will do them good. First scratch the soil lightly all over the bench. Then sprinkle the bone on, about twenty-five to thirty pounds to a bench of the size you mention. Then cover about one-half inch thick with old cow manure which has been broken up well. After that water thoroughly once and after that water as before, except it will not require as frequent watering on account of the mulch. Wood ashes is used mostly to stiffen the stems, and we apply it about three times as heavy as we do bone, measuring the bulk instead of the weight. Better wait until about January 1 if you apply the bone and manure now. A. F. J. B.

Carnation Winsor.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., registers Carnation Red Riding Hood, in color a bright scarlet, in form well built, nicely fringed and well filled, with a calyx that does not burst; stem long and strong, perfectly straight; in substance the keeping qualities are of the best; in productiveness it is early, free and always in crop; in habit it has strong, clean growth, with wide, heavy grass, establishing itself readily and making rapid advance.

J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., registers Carnation Lucile, a large white bloom overlaid with pink, with a long, stiff stem.

H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., registers Carnation Toreador, white overlaid with pink, after the style of Prosperity, but showing more and deeper color, particularly the inner portion of the flower, bounded on the outer side of the petals with a distinct white zone; flowers fully as large as Prosperity at its best; a strong, vigorous grower, with no surplus grass, and will stand close planting; August 1 planting will give first-class blooms by October 1.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

In England many acres of chrysanthemums are grown in the field, and when cold weather is expected a light framework of posts and crossbars is erected and over this is laid lightly constructed sashes, which are kept firmly in their places with a few bolts. These are fixed high enough from the ground for workmen to walk underneath. In this way a whole two-acre lot or more can be cheaply and rapidly covered and protected from frost and rain, the latter probably being the worst enemy of outdoor chrysanthemums. This protection is quite enough to bring the bloom on to best condition. In some cases a run of piping for heating is hung on the uprights around each span, a portable boiler being used. When this plan is adopted the bloom can be kept in perfect condition even as late as Christmas.

I notice a writer in an American trade paper is wondering why wholesalers in the States do not send roses, carnations, etc., to the English markets, and thinks a very profitable trade could be built up in that way. No doubt they could be packed so as to arrive in perfect condition; but what about the English growers? We have enough and to spare of all kinds of cut flowers in Covent Garden and other markets. If any intending American exporter doubts my statement let him make a visit to Covent Garden, say at six o'clock on any market morning, and he will come to the conclusion that he need not send any cut blooms from America. During the last season the supply has been probably one-third above the demand and exceptionally low prices have obtained in consequence. Roses, in particular, have on some market mornings been almost given away and loads have been thrown away at the end of the day. Even the American varieties of carnations are getting so cheap and plentiful that there is now no more than a living profit in them. It is a well-known fact that in the foreign flower-market the end of the day sees big quantities of cut blooms pitched into the waste-cart.

An unprecedented slump is being experienced in the English-grown grape trade. Never before has the quantity been so large, the quality so good and the price so low. Magnificent Black Hamburgh and Alicante can be had as low as 14 cents per pound, grown at Worthing, and even Muscats are down as low as a shilling (24 cents). Ordinary black grapes can now be grown at a profit for 1 shilling per pound, but at 14 cents they of course lose money. There was a time when nothing under about 3 shillings per pound left a profit, but the larger growers met the bad markets by cheapening production.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

PRESENTATION PIECES.

It is quite the regular thing in certain flower stores to have calls for designs for presentation as testimonials of esteem or evidences of good will. The alderman-elect is presented with a "piece" by the members of the ward club, each of whom is living in hopes of sharing in the candidate's success; the wholesale cigar house sends flowers to the opening of the new corner saloon. It is a line of work which affords a good margin of profit and is capable of development, but is often productive of unusual requirements, for frequently the order goes elsewhere if the buyer's ideas, however grotesque, are opposed. Not long since a Chicago ward elected a saloonkeeper to the city council, and nothing would do for his friends but a huge round plaque representing the end of a beer keg, with a great faucet projecting from it. The florist made it, all right, the keg of Roosevelt carnations, the brass faucet of daffodils and the ward number lettered on in violets.

The accompanying illustration shows how well B. Abrahamson, a retailer on West Taylor street, Chicago, arose to the occasion when the Lion Store was opened in his neighborhood and he was called upon to make a piece symbolical of the name. He made it on a flat frame, to stand on a pedestal and be viewed only from one side. The body was made of pink carnations, with Bridesmaid roses for the parts of the lion which in nature are lighter colored. The mane was pink and white dahlias and the design was easily the hit of a quite lavish floral display.

DECORATORS' AIDS.

At the recent Chicago show the retailers were attracted by the tasteful staging of the Eaton Flower Store's fine display of violets, for the receptacle was distinctly new. It is an invention of M. V. Garnsey, of La Grange, Ill., who about a year ago put the now well-known Japana flower holder on the market. The Japana is a cylindrical piece of brilliant lead glass, fire polished. It is perforated with holes in which the stems of flowers are placed. The holder may be placed in any sort of receptacle and water poured over it, where it not only adds to the loose and tasteful arrangement of the flowers, permitting each to show its individuality, but it serves to keep them fresh, for the base of the holder is notched so that a circulation of water is provided. The holder is practically invisible when covered with water, but is of sufficient weight so that quite heavy, long-stemmed flowers may be used in it. It is particularly adapted to use with open bowls for bulbous stock. So well has this article pleased the public that Mr. Garnsey a few days ago shipped as a single order fifty barrels to a supply dealer in Germany.

The Anglais table decoration, as used by the Eatons at the Chicago show, is made of two units each containing a Japana holder, one unit crescent in form and one rectangular. Each piece is five and a half inches long and two and a half inches deep, and being made up of sections, many combinations of form can be arranged and adapted to any style of decoration. Each section containing a Japana holder, it affords a practical and simple method of arranging flowers in an artistic manner, and being only two and a half inches high, it permits of low treatment, the flowers not interfering with the view across the table.

A BRIDAL BOUQUET.

It is not often that we see a photograph of a man carrying a bridal bouquet; usually it is a woman. But in this case the maker of the bunch was so well pleased with his work that he repaired to the picture place and the photographer got them both on his negative. The gentleman is F. W. Kummer, manager of the Carolina Floral Co., Charleston, S. C., and the bunch is made of cattleyas, dendrobiums, lilies of the valley and Farleyense ferns, tied with chiffon. The bunch had a much lighter appearance than is indicated in the photograph, where the shadows produce a somewhat heavy effect.

Mr. Kummer was for five years the designer and maker-up for the J. M. Connelly Co., in Charleston, and is not only up-to-date in store work, but also in plant growing and in landscape work. He has been nineteen years in the business, having learned his trade in Switzerland, his native land. Charleston recently had a gala week and Mr. Kummer was awarded the prize for the best decorated store front, all the merchants on the principal streets having competed.

THE ART OF SALESMANSHIP.

Results the Test of Ability.

In opening this discussion it may serve the purpose better to first define an ideal salesman. The modern acceptance of the term is that of the salesman who sells the most, or makes the most money, as compared with others of his class, for the establishment in which he is employed. The sense in which this paper will deal with this topic is that the ideal salesman is the most successful salesman so far as financial returns are concerned.

Must Know Human Nature.

Considering the fact that the salesman comes in contact with all kinds of people, it is of prime importance that he be a good judge of human nature. He must know how to act, and act quickly, when a sale is at stake. He should be able to gain a fair knowledge of the disposition of the customer from his first inquiries and general bearing. Some people enjoy conversation and an occasional joke; others are offended at too much talk. He must read his people so as to frame his remarks accordingly. Many sales are lost because the customer is displeased by an ill-timed word spoken by a clerk who fails of understanding his customer.

The successful salesman is the man who possesses an insight into the ways of his customers and sympathizes with them.

Know Your Goods.

A second requisite is a thorough knowledge of the goods offered for sale. Nothing is more discouraging to the success of any business than ignorance on the part of clerks. A knowledge of the goods and their uses often is the means of making a sale. For instance, a lady wishes to purchase potted plants for outdoor bedding purposes but is at sea for the want of ideas as to what she shall buy and how she shall use the plants after purchase. It is here that a clerk either can lose or make a sale. If he appears indifferent, either through ignorance or negligence, the customer may buy a slim bill, probably not enough to cover the ground and give satisfaction, or possibly she may become discouraged and buy nothing at all. On the other hand, if an intelligent or wide-awake, well-posted clerk politely offers a few suggestions he often can not only sell the goods but he frequently can increase the bill by selling more through cautious intimation and yet give the customer the best of satisfaction.

The old axiom that there is no salesmanship required when a customer says to a clerk, "Give me the goods or I will tell the boss," still holds good. Such a customer does not require a skilful salesman, but the salesman who sells things which people did not call for or want until their interest was awakened by the clerk is the salesman who passes in the fat salesbook at night.

The modern flower store from time to time receives new goods which require introduction to the trade. The ideal salesman does not forget to remind his customers of them or to explain their advantages. Many clerks are timid concerning the introduction of new goods, an attribute which should be foreign to the successful salesman.

Be Sure of Your Facts.

Ignorance in any branch of human endeavor is never at a premium. Nothing is more disgusting than to hear a clerk catch himself in his own trap, in assuming knowledge he does not possess. If a salesman does not know whereof he speaks, silence is to be commended. Caution is one of the cardinal virtues in salesmanship.

While a fair knowledge of Latin terminology is desirable it is not absolutely necessary in a salesman in a retail florist's establishment, but a thorough knowledge of structural and functional botany is of great importance. In these days of widespread intelligence, people often inquire as to the whys of plant life and expect an intelligent reply from one engaged in the business. In the large cities and in towns where culture prevails, many people study botany for their own amusement and naturally when they purchase at the flower stores they are often inclined to ask for explanations relating to the various phases of flowers and plants. If these inquiries are met with indifference and lack of information by the salesman, it does not create a good impression on the customer. While it cannot be expected of a salesman that he be an expert botanist and that he be able to throw light on the great problems of variation and cross-fertilization, he ought at least to have a conversational knowledge of plants and their peculiarities.

A Southern Bridal Bouquet and Its Maker.

Skill in Handling Stock.

Another important essential in the ideal salesman is proficiency in the arrangement of goods. For instance, a customer enters a retail store, wishing some cut flowers: The clerk gets them and throws them on a pile like so much hay, regardless of artistic arrangement, and without thought as to the proper light, so as to make them appear to the best advantage.

Let us reverse the case and put the clerk with tact and ingenuity in the place of the indifferent one. He is careful at all times when in the presence of a customer to handle the flowers as if they were of value. It leaves a bad impression if goods are handled carelessly, the customer often forming the opinion that you do not consider your goods of much worth. He loosely holds the roses, carnations or whatever he happens to be displaying, and grasps them at the lower part of the stems, so as to make them appear as graceful as possible. He tries to obtain the best light and through intelligent and well-directed endeavor he seeks to humor the customer's fancy.

Which of the two clerks is the better fitted to wait on the trade?

An ideal salesman takes the same amount of interest in the proprietor's business as if his own money were invested. He does not through lack of attention on his part allow any sale to escape him. He is always open to suggestion and is enterprising and always planning more effective methods of selling goods.

Tact is Invaluable.

One of the greatest resources which a salesman can possess is tact, the ability to discover a customer's wishes without asking too many questions. A great many people dislike an attack of questions and often take offense if too many are asked them. The average woman would rather look about the store and examine the goods before she purchases; and if she is not granted this privilege she may become irritated and in some cases may be inclined to leave the store.

In every business there is a class of customers who are easily offended and, as it were, are ready to fight at the drop of a hat. Some salesmen may say: "I can live without them; let them bother other dealers." Now, Mr. Salesman, if you are energetic and enterprising you cannot afford to lose one customer, no matter how little he buys. It often happens that customers who buy the least are quite influential. The ideal salesman never allows a customer to depart from the store dissatisfied if politeness, reason and common sense can accomplish this end.

Misrepresentation Fatal.

The misrepresentation of goods is a vital factor in the downfall of any business. The salesman who misrepresents goods for the sake of getting large sales for today fast loses prestige with his customers. The successful salesman looks

In the large cities and in towns where culture prevails, many people study botany for their own amusement and naturally when they purchase at the flower stores they are often inclined to ask for explanations relating to the various phases of flowers and plants. If these inquiries are met with indifference and lack of information by the salesman, it does not create a good impression on the customer. While it cannot be expected of a salesman that he be an expert botanist and that he be able to throw light on the great problems of variation and cross-fertilization, he ought at least to have a conversational knowledge of plants and their peculiarities.

Skill in Handling Stock.

Another important essential in the ideal salesman is proficiency in the arrangement of goods. For instance, a customer enters a retail store, wishing some cut flowers: The clerk gets them and throws them on a pile like so much hay, regardless of artistic arrangement, and without thought as to the proper light, so as to make them appear to the best advantage.

Let us reverse the case and put the clerk with tact and ingenuity in the place of the indifferent one. He is careful at all times when in the presence of a customer to handle the flowers as if they were of value. It leaves a bad impression if goods are handled carelessly, the customer often forming the opinion that you do not consider your goods of much worth. He loosely holds the roses, carnations or whatever he happens to be displaying, and grasps them at the lower part of the stems, so as to make them appear as graceful as possible. He tries to obtain the best light and through intelligent and well-directed endeavor he seeks to humor the customer's fancy.

Which of the two clerks is the better fitted to wait on the trade?

An ideal salesman takes the same amount of interest in the proprietor's business as if his own money were invested. He does not through lack of attention on his part allow any sale to escape him. He is always open to suggestion and is enterprising and always planning more effective methods of selling goods.

Tact is Invaluable.

One of the greatest resources which a salesman can possess is tact, the ability to discover a customer's wishes without asking too many questions. A great many people dislike an attack of questions and often take offense if too many are asked them. The average woman would rather look about the store and examine the goods before she purchases; and if she is not granted this privilege she may become irritated and in some cases may be inclined to leave the store.

In every business there is a class of customers who are easily offended and, as it were, are ready to fight at the drop of a hat. Some salesmen may say: "I can live without them; let them bother other dealers." Now, Mr. Salesman, if you are energetic and enterprising you cannot afford to lose one customer, no matter how little he buys. It often happens that customers who buy the least are quite influential. The ideal salesman never allows a customer to depart from the store dissatisfied if politeness, reason and common sense can accomplish this end.

Misrepresentation Fatal.

The misrepresentation of goods is a vital factor in the downfall of any business. The salesman who misrepresents goods for the sake of getting large sales for today fast loses prestige with his customers. The successful salesman looks beyond today. He is willing to sacrifice a dollar or two if necessary for the future trade of a customer. It is not the dollar lost or made today, but the satisfaction given to customers which assures business perpetuity.

An accommodating salesman is a business-bringer; he is a standing recommendation for the firm employing him. Customers appreciate favors and are desirous of trading with salesmen possessing the trait of accommodation. It accomplishes even more when the salesman unasked, appreciating the position of the customer, offers the assistance which seems desirable. Business life is the same as life in general in the respect that those people are prized most highly who can enter with sympathy the interest of those about them, sympathy being interpreted to mean not flattery but rather a judicious understanding of the circumstances.

Politeness in any walk of life is pleasing. It seems obvious, and out of place to mention it in connection with this theme, but politeness often is sacrificed for business despatch. No one will dispute that despatch is desirable in business, but it must not be allowed to overreach its bounds and encroach on courtesy. This is an element in modern business methods which is underestimated and often proves expensive. A salesman may possess splendid selling instincts but if he lacks this simple essential he lacks one of the most important qualifications which go to make a successful salesman.

Common sense, which forms the basis of most successful ventures, is the greatest resource which a salesman can possess. To be able to understand the situation, determine the wants of the customer and then proceed to satisfy them in a manner pleasing to both customer and proprietor is the long and short of successful salesmanship, a salesmanship too rarely met with.

THE AUTUMN EXHIBITIONS

PROVIDENCE.

According to those authoritatively informed, to conduct a flower show successfully two essential conditions must be considered. First, to secure an attractive exhibit of stock; second, to get people to look at the things exhibited.

The annual exhibition of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, in Falstaff hall, November 13 and 14, showed conclusively that the members of that organization were keenly alive as to the essentials of a well-conducted show, as shown by a grand collection of cut flowers, decorative, foliage and flowering plants, which in both quality and numbers in many classes far surpassed anything the society has placed before the public during its existence of almost a half-century. The hall, centrally located and admirably adapted for a flower show, was unquestionably the best location yet selected for the purpose, and by a combination of newspaper advertising and complimentary admittance, the exhibition hall was an entrancing scene of color and animation from the time of opening until the clocks had chimed out the midnight hour of the closing date. Unfortunately—for the exhibits especially—the janitor had shown an all too kindly disposition regarding the comfort of visitors; as a natural result, the narcotic-like temperature of the hall caused the entire showing of carnations to wither before the second and final day of the show. These unfortunate conditions naturally lessened the interest and deprived carnationists from neighboring cities, many of whom could not attend until the second day, from inspecting a number of seedlings—the product of local growers.

Among the chrysanthemum exhibits, John A. Macrae's new sport of Yellow Eaton, appropriately named Golden Dome, stood preëminent. Massive in size, brilliant in color and with but slight chance for improvement in form, it easily deserved the meritorious comments received and the gold medal awarded. The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., will disseminate this novelty during the coming season. Mr. Macrae also secured the lion's share of prizes in classes for twenty-five blooms of T. Eaton; display of not less than ten varieties in fifty bottles; also for six vases, ten blooms, long stems. Frank A. Sayles, Pawtucket, was also a prominent winner in the chrysanthemum display, securing numerous leading honors for six specimens of the various colors of standard varieties. Seth A. Borden, Fall River, Mass., won the coveted prize for twenty-five blooms of Col. D. Appleton. William Hill won several prizes with an exhibit comprising gems of the first water.

The carnation exhibit, while ahead of that of last year in numbers, was hardly equal in quality to the one usually seen here. The display comprised principally standard varieties. A few seedlings were shown. J. H. Cushing, Quidnick, won first for display of cut blooms. William Hill won first for seedling produced in Rhode Island. S. J. Goddard, Framingham, Mass., won several leading prizes with an exhibit of named fancy varieties.

In the classes for flowering plants, William Hill captured about everything in sight, showing well-grown specimens of orchids and begonias. There was a large and attractive showing of fruit and many gratuities were awarded in this class.

In a room adjacent to the exhibition hall, the Ladies' Auxiliary held a sale of home-made preserves, etc., the proceeds of which are to be contributed toward the association's building fund.

BALTIMORE.

Our show was held November 13 to 16 at the new Baltimore Florists' Exchange under the auspices of the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Baltimore. The exhibition was staged in two large halls of the building. The blooms were exquisite in size and coloring. At the center and back of the halls were banked palms and ferns, evergreens and trailing vines.

In addition to the mums there were good lots of roses and carnations. Among the most attractive features of the exhibition were the floral pieces. One design for a center-piece for the table was a mound of yellow chrysanthemums with autumn foliage. Another piece was a basket of pale yellow mums and asparagus, while a wreath of the same combination was exquisite.

The judges were William F. Gude, Peter Bisset and Otto Bauer, of Washington. The awards follow:

Twenty-five crimson mums, silver cup, Edward Herrmann, first.

Twenty-five mums, five blooms distinct varieties, for prizes offered by Franklin Davis Nursery Co., G. A. Lotze, first.

Twelve blooms, distinct varieties for prizes offered by Franklin Davis Nursery Co., G. A. Lotze, first; C. R. Dieffenderffer, C. M. Wagner, gardener, second.

Three vases of twelve blooms each, for prizes offered by H. Waterer, Philadelphia, G. A. Lotze, first; C. Gregorious, second.

Twelve Appleton for prizes offered by H. F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, Mrs. James A. Garey, M. J. Hannigan, gardener, first.

Standard, C. R. Dieffenderffer, first.

The committee in charge of the exhibition was George Morrison, F. C. Bauer, G. A. Lotze, James Glass and J. J. Perry.

Banquet.

The members of the Florists' and Gardeners' Club met at the Academy Hotel November 13, where they had a number of guests. The banquet was held in the large dining hall, which was tastefully decorated with chrysanthemums. N. F. Flitton was toastmaster, and those who responded to toasts were William F. Gude, Otto Bauer and Peter Bisset, all of Washington; R. Vincent, Jr., of White Marsh; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; James McNabb, Catonsville, and F. G. Burger, Baltimore.

COLUMBUS.

The annual chrysanthemum show of the Columbus Florists' Club was held November 13, afternoon and evening, in the club's new rooms in the Brent building. It looked early in the season as if the date set would be a little late, but as all mums here are unusually late this year, it turned out that we could not have selected a time that would have found our growers in better form. As the occasion was our house warming in the new quarters, the committee in charge of the evening's entertainment had provided a musical program. The exhibits of chrysanthemums were of a high order, and interest was manifested by the large attendance of members and their friends.

In the class for exhibition blooms, the Fifth Avenue Floral Co. was first with Timothy Eaton, W. H. Chadwick, Golden Wedding and Yellow Eaton; E. Metzmeier, with Alice Byron, Golden Chadwick and W. H. Chadwick, was second, and John H. Williams, with Major Bonnaffon, Modesto and Philadelphia, took third. The above awards were for six blooms.

In the class for three exhibition blooms, C. P. Torrey was first, with May Seddon, Souv. de Montbrun and Merza. The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. was second with Timothy Eaton, W. H. Chadwick and Yellow Eaton. For six commercial blooms, cut from three plants, John H. Williams took first with all Major Bonnaffons; E. Metzmeier second with Golden Chadwick and W. H. Chadwick; and third was won by the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., with W. H. Chadwick. For two commercial blooms cut from one plant, the Franklin Park Floral Co. was first with two blooms of W. H. Chadwick. The second prize in this class went to the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., for the same variety. For nine commercial blooms cut from three plants, E. Metzmeier was first with Golden Chadwick and W. H. Chadwick. John H. Williams with all Major Bonnaffons was second. The last regular class was for three commercial blooms cut from one plant. Again W. H. Chadwick took first, this time for Sherman Stephens; and the second was to the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., for the same variety.

The special features of the show that brought out the keenest competition were the prizes offered by Graff Bros. and M. B. Faxon. Graff Bros.' prize was for the best twelve blooms, to be judged by the commercial scale. The interest of the evening centered in this award, which the committee finally made to the Franklin Park Floral Co., for an assorted dozen of Golden Chadwick and W. H. Chadwick. The M. B. Faxon prize was for the best five commercial blooms, and was won by the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., with W. H. Chadwick. The Livingston Seed Co. staged a fine collection, including blooms of Dr. Enguehard, Golden Wedding, Lord Hopetoun, Major Bonnaffon, Alice Byron, Merza, Golden Chadwick, W. H. Chadwick, the Eatons and many others. C. A. Roth and Sherman Stephens also entered fine collections of cut blooms. As these last three exhibits were entered for exhibition only, the committee awarded Messrs. Livingston, Roth and Stephens each honorable mention. The committee on awards was M. B. Faxon, Samuel Graff and T. A. Sexton.

LAUREL WREATHING.

One of the earliest benefits resulting from the Chicago flower show has been the stimulation of the demand for laurel wreathing. Laurel was little known in the middle west until its usefulness was demonstrated by the excellent decoration for the Chicago flower show, where 15,000 yards were used. The decorators were Charles A. Samuelson and W. J. Smyth, and now laurel is in demand for all sorts of large jobs.

For the Chicago show 10,000 yards of the wreathing were supplied by the E. F. Winterson Co. The accompanying illustration gives some idea of the bulk of this great quantity of wreathing. The two-horse wagon shown carried only about one-half of the 10,000 yards the Winterson Company supplied.

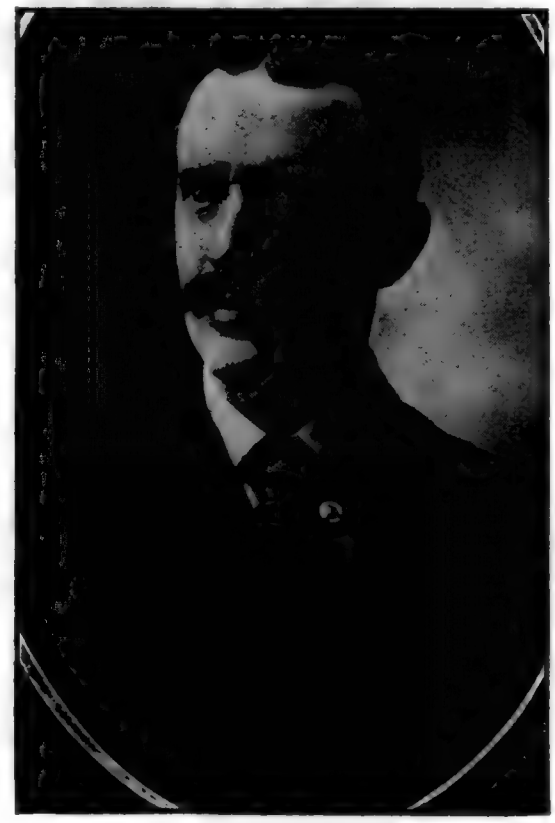
C. H. RONEY.

C. H. Roney, superintendent of the Lakeview Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., has been in the trade since he was a boy. He is a native of England, having been born in the village of Bigrigg, near Whitehaven, April 2, 1865. At the age of 14 years he began his career as a florist, being an apprentice for three years on the estate of David Ainsworth, M. P., under the tutelage of William Fox, gardener. After going to the estate of Lord Lonsdale, Lowther Castle, Whitehaven, and remaining for some time, he went to James Dickson & Sons, Newton Nurseries, Chester, England, and worked through all the departments of their business, both inside and outside the greenhouses.

Coming to the United States in 1885, Mr. Roney's first position was with Alburger Bros., of Philadelphia. He was also with Robert Craig & Son for some time. From Philadelphia he went to Wilkesbarre, Pa., and was manager of the Wilkesbarre Floral Co. He stayed with this firm until real estate became too valuable for greenhouse purposes in that part of town, and the place was torn down. After four years spent with Benjamin Dorrance, of Dorrance, Pa., he accepted the office of head gardener to James Boyd, of Harrisburg, Pa., and for five years had charge of one of the finest and best equipped private greenhouses in southeastern Pennsylvania. While in this position, Mr. Roney did considerable work in landscaping, laying out new grounds, drives, golf links and artificial lakes.

In 1898 Mr. Roney went to Jamestown, N. Y., as manager of the Lakeview Rose Gardens, where he has continued until the present time. He has developed the business of this firm until the houses now cover eight acres, solidly built up in greenhouse glass. He has developed a trade that compasses a radius of 500 miles from Jamestown. The Lakeview Rose Gardens has become one of the leading eastern establishments.



UTICA, N. Y.

New Seedling Raisers.

This city has become quite a rose center, following in the footsteps of Peter Crowe; but our special journey to Utica was to visit the carnation specialists, H. H. Nicholson and A. O. Grassl, at the Wa-no-ka Greenhouses. This Indian name must be pronounced with the emphasis on the "no," and means, in Indian lingo, wigwam or tepee alone or isolated. As the elder Mr. Nicholson was the first of the Utica citizens to build a beautiful summer residence in the village of Barneveld he thought the name appropriate, and when he built his first three carnation houses the same euphonious Pawnee designation was given them. This village formerly was known as Trenton, but is now known as Barneveld, and is a pretty village nestling in the foothills of the Adirondack mountains and thirty minutes by rail north of Utica. There is no Mohawk or Seneca Indian left to scalp the white man, but there is black bear and deer in abundance within a few miles.

Mr. Nicholson for two years had no expert grower, and then secured the services of A. O. Grassl, who now is an equal partner. Mr. Grassl, it will be remembered, was the carnation specialist for several years with L. E. Marquisee, of Syracuse, and to him must be given the credit of raising that fine old pink, so happily named The Marquis, and later the fine scarlet, Flamingo, and several others less widely grown.

If ever the prospects of a firm looked rosy it is this one. I had the pleasure of visiting these houses three years ago, and I then said, as can be repeated, that for health, vigor and quantity of bloom and buds I never had seen their carnations equaled, and I have seen some in my travels. At that time the houses were filled with the standard varieties, and Mr. Grassl had too recently taken hold to show any result in crossing varieties, but now it is a different story. Well-grown benches of Lawson, Enchantress and The Queen are passed without comment because Mr. Grassl has seedlings of his own that make these good varieties look small and commonplace. There are a few of these seedlings that will cause a sensation in the carnation world. It is a common failing to be too much enamored with one's own offspring, to be blind to their faults, but both members of the firm reiterated the statement that no seedlings of theirs ever will be sent out that they have not proved to be superior in habit, stem, size and color to any existing variety, and they mean to keep to this laudable policy. We could not remember the many good things, so made notes on the spot, and here they are:

No. 32, Apple Blossom, seedling 1904. They now have a large stock extremely free, fifteen to twenty Christmas buds now showing, last year yielded thirty-six flowers to the plant, largest size and perfect form, in bright weather almost pure white, in cloudy weather lightly splashed with pink. Never have we seen such a mass of flowers and buds.

No. 5—Lawson type, but a great improvement on that famous variety, both in form and color. Does not show the blue shade as in Lawson.

No. 110—This wonderful seedling will easily displace Enchantress. It is a salmon pink, will average three and one-half inches, and twice as heavy, and a great stem.

No. 25—Large and free white, an improvement over Lady Bountiful and much freer.

No. 103—Another large, pure white of great freedom.

No. 8—Medium sized white of Lawson habit. This is extremely free, and although we call it medium size it will make The Queen and Market look small.

No. 11—Large and prolific crimson.

There is one seedling grown here, named Snowball, phenomenal for size and freedom. The flowers will average four inches and resemble a small flower of Ivory chrysanthemum.

There are a number of other seedlings growing here, crimson, light and dark pink, variegated, etc., but the above are the pick. Although Mr. Grassl believes truly that he has a phenomenal flower in Snowball and the improvement on Enchantress, No. 110, yet I was greatly impressed with the beautiful Apple Blossom. Mr. Grassl is such an expert in the art of crossing and selecting varieties that I soberly say from this sequestered village is likely to emanate for many years successive wonders of the dianthus family. I hope you will all see Apple Blossom at Toronto, and others from this young firm.

Crowe and Brant Bros.

We took advantage of the hospitality of our old friend Peter Crowe, at the home of Adiantum Croweanum. At his fern-houses there are 25,000 feet of glass devoted to the adiantum which bears his name, and yet he tells me he cannot fill his orders.

The Brant Bros. have rented fifteen large modern rose houses of Mr. Crowe's and have been so successful that last spring they purchased two acres of land and built a range of six houses, each 22x150. Both this range and the houses rented are in fine order. We had a pleasant visit with Harry Brant, who later in the day started on a visit to his brother in Madison, N. J. W. S.

MILWAUKEE.

Fred W. Mueller, who has been in the newspaper business at Watertown, Wis., will put up a range of 15,000 feet of glass close to Milwaukee in the spring, to grow carnations for the wholesale market.

Mr. Mueller came to this country from Germany when 19 years of age, with but 35 cents in his pocket. He could not speak a word of English, and went to work in a brickyard and in the timber camps of Michigan. During his spare hours he educated himself in English. Subsequently he came to Milwaukee and worked at whatever honorable employment he could obtain, until he became a reporter on a German newspaper in Milwaukee, in time becoming the editor of a daily paper. After a while the paper upon which he was employed was consolidated with another, and he became manager. Afterwards he became advertising agent of the Milwaukee Herald.

OSAGE, IA.

The annual chrysanthemum show and floral exhibit at Walter Hall's greenhouses, November 12-14, was quite a success, with a good attendance each evening. The chrysanthemums made a gorgeous display, and the houses were decorated with Japanese lanterns, flags and festoons. On Thursday evening a reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hall to 250 invited guests. The office was beautifully decorated and arranged to look like a parlor, where the guests were received, after which they were invited to the dining-room, where light refreshments were served. Here the decorations were in green. Timothy Eaton mums and green carnations were the flowers used. Music was furnished by Prof. Annise's orchestra.

BOSTON.

The Market.

A much improved tone has been apparent in the market during the last few days, due in some degree to a better demand and also to the customary holding back for Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemums have cleared well. Some small blooms have sold as low as $2 per hundred, mediums at $5 to $8, while select blooms brought $3 to $4 per dozen. Roses have also sold better at about the same rates as a week ago except that better grades show a hardening tendency. Carnations have cleared out well at from $1.50 to $4 per hundred. Scarlet shades of good quality made the top price.

Violets took a boom on November 17 for the big football games, realizing $1 per hundred. From 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred has been the steady average on other days. Singles are now of superb quality. Sweet peas remain at $1 per hundred, snapdragon $4, valley $3 to $5, lilies and callas $12.50. Bouvardia comes from several growers and sells in various sized bunches at 25 cents, 50 cents and 75 cents per bunch. Adiantum, smilax and asparagus remain about the same. Some nice azaleas, cyclamens, Lorrain begonias, ardisias and solanums are arriving in addition to pots of chrysanthemums.

Horticultural Society Election.

The annual election of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on November 17 drew out the largest gathering seen for a number of years at a similar meeting. Special interest attached to the election for president, W. W. Rawson running as an independent candidate against Gen. S. M. Weld, the regular nominee. An appropriation of $5,500 for prizes during 1907 was carried. Considerable discussion took place in regard to the nominating committee ignoring Mr. Rawson's claim to the presidency, in which President A. F. Estabrook, W. H. Spooner, W. W. Rawson, Jas. H. Bowditch and others took part.

Voting was by Australian ballot, the following being the result: For president, Gen. Weld 136 votes, W. W. Rawson 66. Other officers elected were vice-president for two years, C. S. Sargent; trustees for three years, W. N. Craig, A. F. Estabrook, A. O. Hill and John K. M. L. Farquhar; nominating committee, A. F. Estabrook, W. H. Heustis, William Nicholson, Loring Underwood and Edward B. Wilder.

Club Meeting.

All records for attendance were once more broken at the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club November 20. It was evident that considerable canvassing had been in progress on behalf of some of the candidates and a keen interest was taken in the struggle for the presidency between T. H. Westwood and J. W. Duncan. The nominating committee, Messrs. Orpet, Cameron and Heurlin, according to a previous vote of the club, brought in two sets of names for each office. Balloting by the Australian system occupied considerable time, the final result being announced as follows: President, T. H. Westwood, sixty-seven votes to J. W. Duncan sixty; vice-president, F. E. Palmer, Brookline; secretary, W. N. Craig, North Easton; treasurer, Edward Hatch; executive committee, Messrs. Cameron, Wheeler, Grey and Nicholson. The tellers were Messrs. Orpet, Sim, Rea, Finlayson and Cameron.

The membership list was once again increased to the extent of seventeen names and more are promised for the December meeting. It was reported that a good start in securing applications for the landscape gardening classes had been made, starting with fifty, and quite a number more expressed their desire to join them. Treasurer Hatch offered $100 to assist the work.

Exhibits were quite numerous and included S. J. Goddard's new variegated seedling carnation, Helen Goddard x Enchantress, which showed up well. Other seedling carnations were from M. A. Patten & Co. and the Stevens Co. Each received a vote of thanks, as did Duncan Finlayson for a fine collection of mums, also a report of merit for Calanthe vettata lutea. W. N. Craig showed twenty-five varieties of single geraniums of the large round-flowered type, also pompon and single chrysanthemums, and received a report of merit for the geraniums. Sim had his new single violet and Fletcher showed Ficus altissima. James Salter brought fine Enchantress carnations and W. H. Heustis showed Ilex glabra. C. H. Totty sent a collection of pompon and single mums.

A lecture by W. H. Wyman was announced for the December meeting.

Queries from the question box and refreshments took up some time and it was quite a late hour before the biggest and best club meeting yet held adjourned, all being brimful of enthusiasm.

Various Notes.

D. Henry Sullivan, for twelve years assistant superintendent under the late William Doogue, succeeds the latter as superintendent of the Boston Public Grounds.

H. N. Eaton, of South Sudbury, is bringing in some fine flowers of his namesake in chrysanthemums.

Charles Algen, an employee of J. Newman & Son, was thrown out of a hack and quite badly hurt November 16.

Bulb planting has just been completed in the Boston Public Gardens. Some 400,000 tulips and 50,000 hyacinths, in addition to narcissi, etc., were used.

On November 18 and 19 shade temperatures reached 68 degrees. So far we have escaped the snow blanket which has stretched north, south and east of us.

H. M. Robinson & Co. report a steadily increasing trade in cut flowers. November 17 was a strenuous day with them.

S. J. Goddard was a successful exhibitor of carnations at the recent Providence, R. I., shows.

Peirce Bros. are, as usual, marketing big quantities of Bonnaffon, Ivory, Balfour and other mums of fine quality.

APPLETON, WIS.

Upon a recent trip to Appleton, M. Crawford, of Cuyahoga Falls, O., said he always likes to visit here because he has an old friend and classmate of his school years here in Miss May Carter, preceptress at Ormsby hall. In the conversation it developed Miss Carter was born and reared in Cuyahoga Falls, and that the May gladiolus, one of the most widely grown varieties, was named after Miss Carter. It seems when Mr. Crawford was first experimenting in what has become his life work he was working one day when Miss Carter and other classmates called on him, and before they left he named a bulb after each of them. The bulb named after Miss Carter happened to possess the properties requisite for its going all over the world, and though few know where it derived its name, Gladiolus May, Mr. Crawford divulged the secret.

DANVILLE, ILL.

Danville is one of the most important cities in Illinois outside of Chicago. Our shipping facilities consist of both steam and electric lines. No one with money needs to have any fear in locating here, as Chicago can be reached with our flowers in three hours over any one of three different lines. It is also one of the healthiest cities in the country.

We had a flower show at the Soldiers' Home November 11. It was free to the public and was well attended all day. It was a real treat to flower lovers.

All the florists report trade good in cut flowers, the demand being greater than the supply.

CANON CITY, COLO.—E. R. Bess has opened a flower store at 322 Main street.

STREATOR, ILL.—The Hill Floral Co. makes a fine showing of mums, carnations, roses and sweet peas. The firm has six greenhouses and three acres of land.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—J. G. Bischoff has finished one of his new greenhouses. When all of the improvements contemplated are finished he will have one of the finest ranges in the country.

C. H. RONEY.

C. H. Roney, superintendent of the Lakeview Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., has been in the trade since he was a boy. He is a native of England, having been born in the village of Bigrigg, near Whitehaven, April 2, 1865. CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—The trade here is suffering from an over-production of chrysanthemums. The greenhouses are filled with mums and, despite the fact that they are selling fast, there is a big surplus.

SPECIAL CHRISTMAS ISSUE.

The Special Christmas Number of the REVIEW will be issued as usual, being mailed to the trade on the morning of December 13. The special issues of the REVIEW are of such great interest to the whole trade that the advertising in them is increasing not only steadily but rapidly. Advertisers will give us much assistance in turning out a well printed Christmas Number by sending advertising copy early.

GOOD PACKING.

A man does not require a college education to be able to pack plants so that they will ship safely; rather does he require a little of that genius which has been defined as the ability to do small things well. Almost anyone may learn how plants should be packed, and also how they should not be packed, by noting the packing of the various shipments which he receives. There is no detail of the plantsman's business which is of greater importance than the packing. No matter how good stock may be when it is sent out, if it is not well packed it is more or less valueless when it reaches its destination some hundreds of miles away. Any man who hopes to build up a wholesale business in plants, or who even expects to maintain an outlet for his surplus stock, cannot afford the big little detail of packing his stock well.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS

Express Company Answers.

The United States Express Co. has made answer to the complaint of the Society of American Florists, which was filed against it a short time ago, with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington.

It will be remembered that the complaint was based on the raising of rates by the express company on flowers carried from points in Pennsylvania and New Jersey to New York City. In its answer, by its attorneys, Boardman, Platt & Dunning, of 35 Wall street, New York City, the company practically denies knowledge of the existence of the Society of American Florists and its work. It admits that "certain individuals and companies made shipments of flowers from the points mentioned in the complaint" to New York City. It denies that the present rates on flowers are unjust or unreasonable, and further denies that prior to May 1, 1906, empty boxes were returned free of charge from New York City, but that prior to May 1, 1906, the rates on empty boxes returned from New York City to the points mentioned were: "Under fifteen pounds, 5 cents each; over fifteen pounds, 10 cents each; refrigerator boxes, 25 cents each." It denies that since May 1, 1906, it has unreasonably exacted the same charges per 100 pounds for the return of empties as it exacts for flowers.

The answer states that at Somerville and Chatham, N. J; Philadelphia, Allentown and Dorranceton, Pa., the company maintains, "at great expense," wagon service which is available to all shippers of flowers, "without charge other than the said express rates." It says that the shippers of flowers at these places bring their shipments to the stations at an unreasonably short time before the departure of trains, causing serious inconvenience to express agents. It closes with the request that the complaint of the S. A. F. be dismissed.

Department of Plant Registration.

The H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., submits for registration the following:

Carnation Toreador, white, overlaid with deep pink, after the style of Prosperity, but showing more and deeper color, particularly the inner portion of the flower, bounded on the outer edge of petals by a distinct white zone. Flowers fully as large as Prosperity at its best. A strong grower, stems long and extra strong.

Chrysanthemum Weber's Chadwick, a yellow sport of Golden Chadwick, much deeper in color than its parent and several shades deeper than Major Bonnaffon. WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market was exceedingly dull all last week, local demand being light and shipping trade nothing to brag about in the later days of the period. This week opened with three days of dark, stormy weather, such as is not favorable to transient trade, and those houses which do not cater specially to the shipping demand noted little improvement. Lighter receipts have in a measure improved the tone of the market, but there is not the activity which is to be expected in the latter half of November.

Chrysanthemums became a serious glut last week and first-class stock sold at prices which looked insignificant as compared with the values realized earlier in the season. The best grade has sold fairly well, although at reduced prices. It has been the small, weak-stemmed stuff which has piled up. The receipts have been far ahead of the market requirements and clean-up sales have been made at little or nothing after the stock got stale. It looks as though the end of the chrysanthemum season is not far off. Doubtless there will be small supplies up to Christmas, but a few days after Thanksgiving will see the mums pretty well out of the way.

Even Beauties have been rather more than equal to the demand in the last week. First-class Brides and Maids have failed to hold up to quotations, there being larger receipts than the daily requirements, and short and weak-stemmed roses have sold very low. There are large crops of both Liberty and Richmond. The quality of all roses averages excellent.

The carnation crops have been retarded by unfavorable weather, but there are enough to go the rounds. First-class stock is to be had in all the wholesale houses and prices have been fairly well maintained. It looks as though growers are holding back for Thanksgiving, and if this is the case they will have occasion to regret their action, for the big shipping orders for carnations which have usually been a feature of the market are lacking this year; recent prices have scared off the big buyers.

Supplies of Harrisii and callas have been light and orders difficult to fill. True to the prediction of H. N. Bruns, quoted in the REVIEW five or six weeks ago, valley has become quite scarce and prices on the best stock have advanced to $5 per hundred, which is about the limit. Buyers usually turn to something else when more than $4 is asked. However, shipments of eastern valley already are being received and the scarcity is likely to be of short duration. New pips already are in for early forcing.

There are a few sweet peas, bouvardias and other specialties in the market. Paper Whites are plentiful. Green goods are abundant.

Chicago's Great Train Service.

A compilation by the Travelers', Shippers' and Mail Guide shows that 1,537 trains—passenger, mail and freight—daily arrive in and depart from Chicago. It is stated no other city in the world can equal this record. The total number of through passenger and mail trains arriving and departing is 455, of suburban trains 807, and of freight trains 272.

The Deering Funeral.

On Monday the E. Wienhoeber Co. had what was possibly the largest funeral of the season, that of the only daughter of the Deering who founded the great harvester works. The casket cover was made of orchids, valley and adiantum and represented $400. McKellar supplied for the day orchids to the value of nearly $200. Practically all the valley in town was used. Three of Wienhoeber's wagons were required to take the flowers to Graceland.

Incidentally, it is worth noting that Chicago retailers are charging for their teams, usually $5 each, when called for for service at funerals.

Violets.

The receipts of New York violets fell off noticeably last week. There are varying opinions as to the cause. One wholesaler says it was the horse show in New York. Another avers that there is no crop on at Rhinebeck. A buyer suggests that the growers have had an intimation that Thanksgiving is coming. At any rate, prices advanced on an otherwise weak market, and practically all the houses are asking more money on orders offered for Thanksgiving. There may be plenty of violets, but the wholesalers do not wish to be caught. If this market does not return as good prices as are realized in New York, that is the end of the violet supply, at least for a time.

Boxwood.

There are varying reports as to the sale of boxwood sprays, but it begins to look as though the boxwood business is likely to be overdone. A couple of energetic gentlemen from the east took large orders from practically all the wholesalers and then supplied the leading retailers, so that everyone has boxwood. Some of the small florists who have not used it until this season have been introduced and are consuming considerable quantities in funeral work, but the market looks to have boxwood to last until the cows come home.

Carnation Winsor.

J. R. Fotheringham, of the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., has spent the time since the flower show in visiting the growers around Chicago. Nearly all the growers attended the show, but Mr. Fotheringham says it surprised him that so few of them saw the new varieties of carnations. His vase of Winsor was the marvel of all observant ones, for, shipped from New York Monday, the flowers were in fine shape Saturday, as fresh as any in the show. Shipments received last week also came through finely. The color pleases and most of the growers on whom he called gave Mr. Fotheringham orders for stock. Poehlmann Bros. Co. took 5,000; Anton Then, 2,500; Jensen & Dehema, a good bunch, and many others. Mr. Fotheringham says the house recently received an order from England for 5,000 cuttings of Winsor.

A Good Glue.

The small detail of pasting the labels on boxes of cut flowers is one that has many times assumed importance through the label soaking off or becoming illegible because of rain blurring the address. E. C. Amling, who always watches the little things that count, has discovered a glue that he thinks should be used by every shipper. It is called Magnet glue, and was sold to him by R. Y. Bradshaw & Co., 15 West Madison street, Chicago. The glue is transparent, so that it may be spread right over the address label, hardens quickly and is waterproof, so that the label is safe as long as the wrapping stays on the box.

the tobacconist in the Ellsworth building, who is perhaps more widely known as Kid Herman, the man of the mitts.

The S. Wilks Manufacturing Co. has just issued a special greenhouse catalogue to send to those who reply to its advertisement in the REVIEW.

Albert Amling has planted a house with Adiantum Farleyense for cutting. He procured his stock of J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, and says he is more than pleased with the plants sent him.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is handling plants from Robert Craig Co., Philadelphia, among them Ficus pandurata, which is something of a novelty in this market.

Sinner Bros. are putting in a new 100 horse-power steam boiler equipped with a Martin rocking grate.

Local buyers find it difficult to place orders for bouquet green. It appears that early bookings are all that the large handlers expect to be able to supply, and it no longer is a question of price.

Wietor Bros. supplied the Boston Store with 12,000 mums in one lot for a special sale last Saturday. For quantity on a single order it probably will stand as a record for this market.

C. M. Dickinson still is suffering with rheumatism, being unable to get to his office more than one or two days a week. Mrs. W. E. Lynch, whose condition gave concern, now is convalescing. T. V. Brown is a new addition to the force at Hunt's.

Zech & Mann are getting in a lot of Maud Dean which would make any of the new pink mums hustle to get into the running.

Peter Reinberg returned Sunday from a week at Duquoin, where he found the quail almost as abundant as Leonard Kill says the buds on Liberty now are in the greenhouses. They also are cutting heavily of Marshall Field and expect Richmond to be in full crop for Christmas. Mr. Kill has been ill for a week, but again is on deck.

Vaughan & Sperry state that last week they received two tons of boxwood sprays from an eastern importer and were somewhat alarmed for fear they had overbought, but say they disposed of 1,000 pounds within three days and are well pleased with the demand.

The A. L. Randall Co. is opening some importations of German Easter novelties. The new catalogue is beginning to enliven things in the supply department.

Weiland & Risch say they are ready for winter, 1,200 tons of fuel being in the sheds and six cars on the track Monday. They burn about 1,800 tons of coal each year.

W. J. Smyth says business has been especially good this fall and thinks that in part at least it is due to the much improved appearance his store makes with its big, new, brilliantly lighted windows. A novelty seen here is covered glass globes filled with partridge berry sprays, the red berries standing out among the dark green leaves, the globe tied with red cord to match. A little damp moss in the bottom of each globe serves to keep the foliage fresh for some time.

Will Arnold, one of George Reinberg's rosegrowers, has returned from Alexandria, Va., where he was called to testify in the suit of J. Louis Loose, who sought damages from the Southern railroad because the greenhouses, where Mr. Arnold formerly was employed, are darkened by smoke from the roundhouse. The jury disagreed.

The Muir store on Michigan avenue makes a fine appearance in the evening, three sides being glass, so that all the stock may easily be seen from the street when the store is lighted up.

Among the week's visitors was Fred Mansoff, of Brandon, Man., looking up material for a new plant he proposes to put up in the spring.

The young lady, Miss Minnie Speck, who now keeps the books for Scheiden &

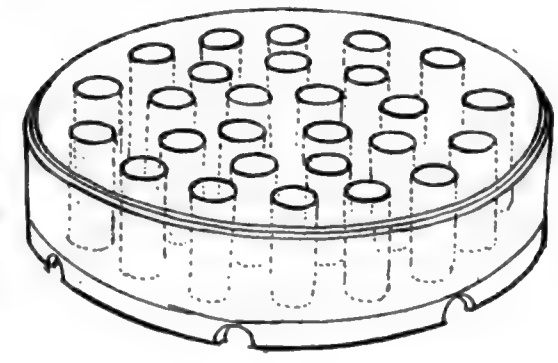
DENVER.

The Market.

Chrysanthemums now occupy the center of the stage and are the most important factor at this time. They have been in good supply. Some fine stock is to be had, but it looks as if there might be a shortage in the finer grades for Thanksgiving. Prices range from $1 to $2 per dozen, some of the fancies bringing a higher price. The chrysanthemums do not seem to interfere to any great extent with the sale of roses and carnations, all of which seem to move at fair prices, roses perhaps being more plentiful and quality good. Carnations have improved and are now nearing the quality of the stock that it is usual to display at this time of the year. Many new varieties are noticed, but only a few have as yet outshone the old varieties. The Park Floral Co. is cutting some especially fine red carnations, Robt. Craig and Victory, and a good supply of excellent Enchantress is being received from various sources. Violets are showing improved color and length of stem, most of them being of really excellent quality, with prices ranging from 50 cents to $1 per hundred.

Various Notes.



The Alpha Floral Co. opened its new store November 16 in the new Empire Building, on Sixteenth street, in the place the old Alpha store was before the building was torn down. They had a fine showing of cut flowers, chrysanthemums predominating. The new store is artistic. The walls are hung in pretty green paper, which forms an effective background to the flowers, and along one side are mirrors running the full length. Back of the store is a palm room where all kinds of potted plants were on exhibition, baskets of begonias hung from the ceiling and formed a bower. Mr. and Mrs. Mahan are to be congratulated on their new store.

A number of eastern florists returned from the Chicago show with J. A. Valentine. Henry and Paul Dailledouze, of Flatbush, N. Y., came by previous arrangement, but a number of others came to investigate the merits of a mining project in which they were interested. These include Arthur Herrington, C. H. Totty, William Duckham, of Madison, N. J.; R. Vince, of Morristown, N. J., and Robert Laurie, of Providence. The trip was a hurried one and only provided for a stay of one night in Denver, so Mr. Valentine telegraphed instructions which resulted in a reception at the office of the Park Floral Co. About thirty of the Denver growers and store men attended to extend greetings to the visitors. At the request of Mr. Valentine, Messrs. Totty and Herrington spoke to those assembled upon new chrysanthemums and the best methods of growing them. William Duckham said a few words for the Chrysanthemum Society of America, which resulted in the course of the evening in securing several new members. Paul Dailledouze told of some of the newer carnations and how they were behaving where he had seen them. Refreshments were then served and the crowd mingled in an informal manner, which enabled all the local men to meet the visitors and become better acquainted. It was an occasion that was greatly enjoyed by local florists, who seldom have the pleasure of meeting so many growers of such enviable reputation. Most of the visitors returned from the mountains on Wednesday and departed for home on the Burlington. Paul and Henry Dailledouze remained a few days longer with Mr. Valentine and took the trip to Colorado Springs and to the Cripple Creek mining district. At Colorado Springs they were royally entertained by Wm. H. Evans, who took them to Glen Eyrie, the Garden of the Gods, and Manitou, and later entertained the visitors and a few others at dinner at the Antlers hotel. Mr. Evans was voted the prince of entertainers.

The Glen Eyrie estate of General Palmer is in charge of Mr. Fohn, formerly of Hartford, and shows that he has made marked progress in the few months he has been in charge. A new park which is being improved in Colorado Springs by General Palmer is under the supervision of John Berry, formerly of Denver. This work deserves extended mention, but lack of space forbids.

The one important event in society this week is the Charity ball, on Thursday evening. The decorations will be as elaborate as in former years and is in the hands of the Park Floral Co.

Emil Glauber, of the Montclair Greenhouses, is cutting some fine long-stemmed Enchantress, also some excellent chrysanthemums. E. S. K.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business has fallen off as compared with a week ago. There were a number of social functions, wedding and some funeral work reported. Next week will be Thanksgiving, and an increase in business is looked for and we hope that it will be large enough to average up a good business for the month.

The wholesale houses are all loaded up with good stock of all kinds, with prices rather low on roses and second-class chrysanthemums. In roses we see some fine stock of Bride, Maid, Richmond, Golden Gate and Ivory, also a fair quantity of Beauties. Carnations, too, have become plentiful in all grades, and for once this season there were more in the market than the demand called for. Violets are not overplentiful and are selling clean at 60 cents per hundred. Extra good lily of the valley is now to be had. Chrysanthemums are still arriving in lots too many for the demand. Extra choice blooms sell well. Other grades are generally left over. The pink sorts are at a standstill. There are plenty of good smilax and other greens.

Various Notes.

During last week the following gentlemen called on the trade: William W. Abrahamson, representing E. H. Hunt, of Chicago; B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia; Henry Johan, of Collinsville, and J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville. Each gentlemen is sending some extra fine stock to the market.

Mrs. Himmer, wife of John Himmer, of Himmer Bros., died last week, leaving a large family. Mr. Himmer has the sympathy of the trade.

George Angermueller was taken ill at the store last Saturday and was taken home, where he is resting easily, and will be out by the end of the week to attend to business.

Mrs. Ostertag has opened the store at Grand avenue and Olive street formerly occupied by her daughter Mary.

The trustees have outlined for the next meeting of the club, December 13, two important discussions and have assigned them as follows: The first one on "How to Decorate a Retail Store for the Christmas Holidays," by Theodore Miller; the second one on "Growing Orchids and Other Varieties of Choice Plants," by H. G. Pring, of the Missouri Botanical Garden. President Irish will call an officers' meeting next week to outline work for each meeting of next year.

All the week large crowds visited the free chrysanthemum show given at the Missouri Botanical Garden. The show was a very attractive one. Superintendent Irish and a large force of students were on hand to see that all were taken care of. The Rising Eastern Market.

During the last week flowers kept moving out fairly well. It is thought that the biggest part of the chrysanthemums have been cut. Those which will come from now on will command a better price than the early ones did. There are some really fine flowers coming to town, which are as good as exhibition kinds, notably some white and yellow Chadwick. Last Saturday was a great day for yellow chrysanthemums, on account of the Princeton football game, which a great many Philadelphians attended. Violets also are in good demand, and as yet do not seem very plentiful. Beauties sold fairly well last week, with a tendency towards better prices, which will probably be realized before the end of the week. There are quite a few gardenias arriving, which find a ready sale when good, at 50 cents. There are some choice carnations, but the market on all grades is inclined to be a little druggy. White and pink roses are not quite up to their form, but are improving, and no doubt from now on will bring a better average price. There are some good Paper White narcissi arriving. In novelties, there is a limited supply of mignonette and forget-me-nots, which find ready sale at good prices; also some snapdragon, Adiantum Farleyense.

Adiantum Farleyense is the most beautiful of our tender ferns. Its exquisite form, grace and shadings of color appeal irresistibly to all flower lovers; decorators prize it for choice work, either with the most fragile blossoms or alone. The difficulty in growing this tender adiantum has greatly restricted its use. For a number of years Philadelphia was obliged to depend on outside growers for a certain supply of fine fronds of this variety. This is the more remarkable when the skill of our local plantsmen is considered, but now it is pleasant to relate we have at least two growers who are able to produce Adiantum Farleyense of finest quality, in sufficient quantity to supply this and probably other cities. H. H. Battles, whose belief in the use of all varieties of fine green is well known, is sending out from his Thornhedge Greenhouses stock that adds even to his reputation, while the Henry A. Dreer Co. is using its new dahlia houses for the time being to produce stock that any good judge would unhesitatingly place in class A, section 1. The modus operandi is one of those simple combinations of conditions controlled and certain laws of plant health strictly followed, which so often distinguish the superior from the ordinary plantsman.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. believes that the quality of flowers will be exceptionally fine for Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemums promise to be more plentiful than in former years.

Mr. and Mrs. George Burton were also noted among those taking in the sight.

The street thinks that the introduction into commerce of Saintpaulia ionantha, the African violet, is another sign of the astuteness of William K. Harris.

George Field, of Washington, D. C., has been sending choice blooms of Vanda cærulea to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

Philadelphians were much pleased that John Burton was one of the judges at the Chicago show.

Samuel S. Pennock is the latest addition to the life membership of the American Rose Society.

The Market.

The "good time coming" so long seems to have at last materialized. Last week closed most encouragingly, with values rising and no apparent fear of any further depression. I predict a steady market, gradually and naturally increasing in buoyancy and volume until Thanksgiving.

There still are plenty of mums, but a large proportion of them are of good quality and command good prices. The common stock of chrysanthemums has decreased in quantity and is no longer a menace. Some grand Enguehard, Chadwick, Bonnaffon and Duckham have commanded $4 to $5 a dozen and a large shipment to John Young, of Gold Mine, from the establishments of John & Robert Leach on Saturday evening was completely sold out at $6 a dozen. I have not seen a finer or more uniform shipment this season. Every flower was perfect. All the wholesale houses have been crowded and are yet with grand stock. No year has ever equaled this in quantity and quality, and the end is not yet.

There will be enough and to spare until after Thanksgiving, and some of the wholesalers announce assured receipts right up to Christmas.

Beauties made a move in the right direction as the week closed, some specials touching $40 per hundred, and all grades advancing. Brides and Maids are abundant, and there was but a slight increase in quotations.

Carnations improve in stem and size, and prices are somewhat better, especially for the fancies and novelties. Of the latter there are now so many that it is hard to name a favorite. For the fancy grade of valley $4 per hundred is top, and little stock arriving is worth it; $5 quotations are fictitious; $2 to $3 is the regular rate.

Orchids are in constant demand, and all that reach the New York market find ready buyers locally or are shipped to other cities. McManus's November bulletin expresses clearly the situation. Cyps again are on deck and many are handling them.

At last the modest and humiliated violet has its second wind or its second crop. At any rate, in beauty, perfume and price "the melancholy days" are over. One dollar to $1.25 was easy Saturday and some fine specials commanded $1.50. Here and there the tide swept even a little higher. It was claimed, though, $1.50 will do for top until Thanksgiving. The supply was insufficient.

tities daily. Weddings are many and every retailer seems to get his share of them. The wild smilax is the groundwork of every decoration. Its popularity grows with each succeeding year. McConnell had an elaborate affair at Harrison, N. Y., last week, the Stursberg-Downey wedding. Fifty enormous palms were used. The mansion of the bride was a bower of Beauties, with a profusion of specimen pink, white and yellow mums. Killarney, too, was a feature, and unique effects were many. Everything now in decoration tends to the unique and original in artistic results, and more and more intellectual designing and effect win practical appreciation. In other words, the man who demonstrates braininess is the man who wins a permanent place and gratifying remuneration.

This is horse show week here, and Chicago knows what that means to the florist, though in the east its influence seems to have gone backward. It may be better this season. The weather of the week opens with a rain after days of sunshine and almost summer temperature. It is rapidly growing colder.

Some extra fine narcissi and cypripediums are being shipped to J. K. Allen.

It is hard to realize that in less than five weeks Christmas will be here. Wonderful novelties there are with the supply men this season. Some of them must be seen to be appreciated, and no time should be lost in laying in the stock in advance of the rush that will soon materialize.

At the horse show orchids will doubtless this year be the thing, though the scarcity of violets may, by their very increase in value, turn the society eyes towards its old-time favorite. Of course the boutonnieres will be gardenias.

Both cities are now teaching the multitudes an object lesson in the annual mum shows in New York and Brooklyn park conservatories. Great crowds have been in evidence. The suburban florists, too, have splendid exhibitions of their own. All are free and the general interest has been encouraging. But it will take an expert prophet to foretell when New York will have a flower show equal to Chicago's wonder of last week, though don't forget it, New York can do it when it gets "good and ready."

It is an inspiration to walk from Twenty-third street to Seventy-second on Broadway, Fifth, Sixth and Madison avenues and see the wonderfully beautiful effects in every florists' window. Space forbids specification. Where any ability or artistic sense prevails the array is most seductive. In fact, the public shows its appreciation in the crowds that surround these dreams in color and arrangement.

The evergreening of the city continues. Bays, box and ivy make all the great hotels attractive in their approaches, outdoor balconies and halls. Never has such universal use been made of the nurseryman's supply. Local growers and enterprising importers in the wholesale district all profit by this addition to public demand and its universality demonstrates the influence of persistent effort. Slowly but surely the nurserymen have taught the possibility of making winter less forbidding by lavish use of evergreens and hardy plants until now a first-class hotel is not first-class without a wealth of these summer memories.

Thomas Wade, formerly with Wadley & Smythe, has charge now of the retail florists' department of Bloomingdale Bros.

William Starke has placed his new boiler in his conservatory on West Twenty-ninth street and is ready for the winter's rigors and well stocked for the Thanksgiving plant demand.

A. J. Guttman is back from Chicago with glowing accounts of the great exhibition.

John Seligman & Co. declare Twenty-sixth street to be in it with any other wholesale street in New York and that the early morning crowds at the market demonstrate it. Their big store certainly is in a convenient spot to see things.

Frank Millang is convalescing rapidly and his broken ankle will be mended in time for the busy Thanksgiving season.

Thos. Young's wholesale windows are filled with handsome kentias and other palms.

Walter Sheridan's Beauties were much in evidence on Saturday, the specials bringing record prices for the day. But here the quality of stock is proverbial at all times, and not alone in roses.

Those lovers of healthful and legitimate sport, the Gunther Bros., are predicting a half million violet demand from New Haven for the great football game Thanksgiving day, and they evidently intend to have their share of the pie as usual.

Bonnot Bros. report an unusual shipping demand for roses, and their base of supply seems inexhaustible.

B. S. Slinn, Jr., is handling superb violets and finds no difficulty in securing top prices.

Ford Bros. have had a busy week, emptying the mammoth ice-box daily and disposing of severe colds, the result of overwork in unloading the goods. The flood of pink and white Ivory here has not diminished. Of these alone enough flow in to keep an ordinary force hustling.

The mum combination of Fenrich on West Twenty-eighth street, and Totty, at Madison, means a daily display of the big novelties, while they last, that are well worth watching.

Hicks & Crawbuck are adding daily to their Jersey growers and the amount of stock handled in their big store at 76 Court street, Brooklyn is now enormous.

H. E. Froment is receiving great quantities of Beauties from his growers, the products of some of the largest Beauty houses in the country. His large store is fitted this season with every convenience and he has added to his force of helpers some familiar faces. Mr. Froment is optimistic as to the coming season's business. So, in fact, are all the New York wholesalers, young and old, new and veteran, for there is room for all in every department of the trade and there is no center with the possibilities and opportunities for honest and aggressive accomplishment to compare with this in all the world.

The Market.

Everything is plentiful and cheap in this market except carnations and violets. The New York growers have been shoving up the price on the latter commodity at the rate of 25 cents every few days, and even at that they could not supply additional quantities. As for carnations, the quality is none too good, but the price keeps advancing all the same. There are some good Paper Whites in the market and good stevia has been coming in from Herman Hart's for the last two weeks.

The Ohio Floral Co. has been cutting some dandy chrysanthemums the last fortnight. They report last week's trade a record-breaker and the banner week since they have been in business. Manager Knoble was hustling around Monday trying to locate a thousand fancy Enchantress for a special order.

Merkel's Flower Shop has gone out of business, the stock and fixtures being disposed of at private sale.

H. B. Jones was at Norwalk, O., last Monday assisting Florist Barton, who had more funeral work than he could turn out working day and night.

Charles Russell, of the Gasser force, went to Mansfield Tuesday to superintend the decorations of a church for a military wedding.

Bate Bros. are cutting a fine lot of stock these days.

The Cleveland Cut Flower Co. reports business this fall considerably ahead of a year ago and a big season seems assured.

State of Trade.

We have much sloppy weather of late and it has affected business. Carnations sell fairly well, but roses are overabundant, and the cause of this is too many mums. They started in at the beginning of the season at a good price and brisk demand, but there is such a quantity of midseason varieties that they are now going a little slow. We think, however, the man who has a good cut for Thanksgiving will find a good market at paying prices.

Mr. Sandiford's Mums.

We visited Mr. Sandiford a few days ago and, of course, the leading topic was mums. He grows all the leading varieties as well as many novelties. Fine bush plants are a leading feature at this fine private garden, and we were impressed with the adaptability for a commercial pot plant of the beautiful daisy-like Garza, also Dr. Enguehard, Princess and Golden Age. This last grand yellow, side by side with Golden Wedding, made that wonderful flower look slightly pale. We noticed a pink, Lady Cranston, that should make a fine commercial variety. We naturally discussed the chinch-bug. This pest never has troubled this locality before this season, but this fall it has become serious and many firms have suffered from its ravages. In warmer sections of the country it is well known. Regular fumigations with tobacco will make them dopey and cool weather makes them sluggish and less troublesome to midseason and late varieties, but this will not do, and before another mum season rolls around we must find some method to destroy it. It's too bad that old Noah took him into the ark at all, along with the skunk, the rattlesnake and several other things we could have dispensed with. Mr. Sandiford says that the chinch-bug is troublesome on dahlias in the east and that is why dahlia growing in hot, dry seasons is almost a total failure.

Christensen's Creed.

Among the finest mums sent to Mr. Kasting's wholesale house are those of C. F. Christensen, of Eggertsville. Mr. Christensen, although a gardener of life-long standing, has little of the sentimental about him. He grows what pays him and pays no attention to flowery descriptions of novelties. He loves his business for the money there is in it, and knows how to make every foot of bench room pay. To quote his own words: "My dear boy, if chickweed paid me better than anything else I would grow chickweed." He grows only three varieties of mums, but those he does superbly. They are Halliday, Maud Dean and Mrs. Weeks. One of the most admirable sights on this place is a glorious compost pile, the foundation of the florists' business and something the average florist is careless over, and yet it is the all-important item if you expect success with your roses, carnations, violets or any other of our plants. are fairly good, the better grades moving nicely. The top price is about $8 per hundred. Kaiserin and La Detroit are becoming poorer as the season advances. Carnations are selling well, the price running as high as $3 per hundred. The quality is not extraordinary. A few hundreds of single violets arrive daily, selling on arrival at 50 cents per hundred. Smilax is plentiful.

Various Notes.

John Breitmeyer's Sons' fall exhibition attracted large crowds to their beautiful store November 13 to 17. In a window on the Broadway side was a large artificial tree stump, overgrown with cattleyas, dendrobiums, oncidiums and other choice orchids, the whole having a charming effect. The windows on the south side were banked with masses of mums. This flower also predominated in the store in such varieties as Yellow Eaton, Kate Broomhead, Golden Wedding, Percy Plumridge, Rozier, Mrs. Beach, Edmund Bell, Sans Souci, Matchless Mrs. H. Patridge, Lord Hopetoun, Prof. Toler, Dr. Enguehard, A. J. Balfour, Mlle. E. Chabanne, Mrs. Marshall and Edgar Sanders.

At least twenty-five varieties of pompons were on exhibition. The rose room was filled to overflowing with the perfume from the many varieties of roses and carnations. Each lady visitor was presented with an unique souvenir in the form of a neat engagement book.

George Heinl, of Toledo, who has been taking the baths at Mt. Clemens, being troubled with rheumatism, returned home last week.

The Detroit horse show, which was held last week, is becoming one of the society affairs of the season, and consequently many of the large stores trimmed their windows in orange and black, the Riding Club's colors. A window in our largest dry-goods store was made attractive with a large horseshoe designed by Schroeter. It was made of Halliday and Golden Wedding mums, and trimmed with oncidiums, and through the center was passed a black taffeta ribbon tied in a large rosette.

by no means well as yet, as he has to resort to the use of crutches. Considering this handicap and the fact that his men have been busy on some new houses, the stock looks good. Mr. Browne is the possessor of some fine stock of White Enchantress from a sport of his own growing.

DAVENPORT, IA.

The Tri-City Florists' Association met at Central park November 15, almost every member being present. The business meeting was held at the home of Superintendent Otto Boehm, opposite the park, and a general discussion on roses, carnations and violets was held. The president called on each member to give a few ideas.

Harry Bills, of the Bills Floral Co., told what he had seen at the Chicago flower show. Mr. Bills told especially of the new ideas in table and wedding decorations and basket arrangements. John Temple, who was one of the judges at the show, also spoke of the show and told of some of the new varieties of roses, carnations and chrysanthemums.

The state convention held at Dubuque in October was discussed by Theodore Ewoldt, who was elected president of the association.

A committee was appointed which will arrange the program and topics to be discussed during the year 1907. The committee consists of William Knees, A. Becker, John Staack, Otto Boehm and Theodore Ewoldt. The committee will meet the latter part of this month to discuss and map out the program.

The next meeting will be held December 13 at the Bills greenhouses on North Brown street, and the subject which will come up for discussion will be "The Propagation of Roses and Carnations, and the Most Profitable Bulb for Florists."

TOLEDO, OHIO.

We had a special Florists' Club meeting on Thursday, November 15, in order to have a chance to examine some of the late mums that were in their glory at that time. George Bayer brought a few flowers of Appleton, Wanamaker and Bonnaffon, all as fine as can be found anywhere. G. N. Keller, of the Bay Shore, brought in a few old-fashioned varieties, among them Beau Ideal, an old-timer of twenty years ago, but still able to hold up its head in good company. He also showed some Dr. Enguehard which were nice, but not fully developed. Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, sent a lot with the statement that they were the best he could do at this late date, but thought we might be interested in them commercially. Among them were Martha Lesseur, fine; Mary Mann, rose pink, built up high; President Roosevelt, pink; an incurved Japanese, pink seedling; Dakoma, largest size; light pink seedling in the way of Viviand-Morel, and a few other seedlings, all fine. The next meeting will be a carnation and cyclamen meeting to be held November 22.

The mother of E. A. Kuhnke died November 13 of heart failure at the age of 65 years. A number of the local florists sent flowers and several attended the funeral. E. A. K.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

WATERMELON is giving concern to some of the mail order houses with large southern trade.

THE canners still are looking for their favorite varieties of peas and prices continue strong on the packers' sorts.

THERE is a disposition to book contract orders early for 1907, with slightly increased prices asked by the growers.

THE importations of German agricultural seeds, especially sugar beet, are starting in heavier than in previous years.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued Circular No. 80, dealing with the melon aphis, which will be of interest to seedsmen.

THE call for the forcing varieties of lettuce, cucumber and radish continues to increase from year to year in spite of the competition of the southern trucking localities.

RENNIE & PINO, Providence, R. I., have dissolved partnership, W. S. Pino to continue the business. Alexander Rennie will shortly open a modern retail seed store on Washington street, Providence.

THE Western Seed & Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., had about half its force of pickers on by November 15 and soon will have the full force employed. Manager Emerson says the crops of melon and cucumber are short, but other crops are full.

FROM present indications those who have not placed orders for bouquet green are likely to have trouble in procuring a supply, as the large handlers are refusing to take further orders, fearing that the quantity of green in sight will not be sufficient to fill early bookings in full.

ROGERS BROS., of Chaumont, Jefferson county, New York, the last few years gradually have been transferring their business of seed growing to Alpena, Mich., growing their stock of peas in northern Michigan and their beans in central Michigan and western New York. They recently have sold their seed house at Chaumont to a milling company that handles feed, flour, hay and farm produce. The Jefferson county section was once a favorable location for growing peas and beans, but the bugs become so thick and other conditions so unfavorable to the growing of peas that they, together with others in their line, were forced elsewhere to grow their stock.

THE movement of peas and beans is somewhat delayed by the difficulty in securing cars just when needed.

IT is reported that James Vick's Sons, Rochester, contemplate the extension of the wholesale end of their business.

JOE WARING, El Reno, Okla., should be added to the seedsmen's mailing lists. He handles garden and agricultural seeds and poultry supplies.

M. CRAWFORD CO., Cuyahoga Falls, O., plans the removal of its business to Bovina township, near Appleton, Wis., where the soil is thought to be specially suited to its specialties.

A FARMER named Strickland, at Arlington, Ariz., is reported to have raised the banner crop of alfalfa seed this year. Off of twelve acres he cut in two crops 11,000 pounds of seed; 8,000 pounds came from the first cutting, or 666 pounds to the acre, and 3,000 pounds from the last cutting, or 250 pounds to the acre. The two crops combined amount to 916 pounds to the acre, and at 7 cents per pound the least any of the farmers from there have sold for, the twelve acres will

The J. Steckler Seed Co., New Orleans, has moved to 512-516 Gravier street, where better facilities were to be had.

The Chicago grass seed market is unchanged. Clover, $13.25 for contract, with cash seed $8 to $12.85. Timothy strong; cash seed, $3 to $4.10; December, $4.30 bid, and March, $4.35 bid.

The directors of the Thompson Seed Co., Albert Lea, Minn., have become discouraged because capital is not forthcoming to carry on the business, but C. O. Thompson, president of the concern, says it is going on if he has to mail the catalogues and ship the seeds from his dining-room table. They have $10,160 invested in the building and equipment.

MR. HENRY ASSUMES.

Under date of November 15, Frank H. Henry, assignee for Clucas & Boddington Co., sends out the following notice to creditors of that concern:

"I beg to advise you that I have assumed the responsibility of distributing to the creditors of the assigned estate of the Clucas & Boddington Co., fifteen per cent of the amount of their lawful claims, and have in my possession check to your order for —— in payment of the dividend upon your claim against the estate. Upon the return of the enclosed receipt, duly signed by you, I will forward you your check forthwith.

"The collection of the assets of the estate and the adjustment of the obligations against it, have consumed more of my time and attention than I anticipated, although the result is gratifying, inasmuch as it has resulted in a larger dividend to the creditors than I anticipated would be paid them. There are still two notes due the estate for $1,750 each, maturing the first days of January and July, 1907, and I shall use every means to collect the same. If I succeed, there will be a further dividend to the creditors of about ten to twelve per cent."

EUROPEAN SEED TRADE NOTES.

As far as the general trade is concerned the seed trade is practically at a standstill in England. In the wholesale trade every firm of importance is working at full strength receiving delivery of the season's crops and contract growths, and warehouses are getting quite full. In fact, some of the large firms dealing in heavy vegetable and farm seeds report a considerable deficiency of warehouse accommodations, and some large provincial firms inform me that the increase of business the last two years necessitates the increasing of their storage capacity and cleaning machinery.

In crop reports radish stocks are still further discounted, and an alarming scarcity in this article may be expected. The general French crops of other lines are turning out after harvesting and dressing about as estimated. I think by appearances no further shortage than already reported may be expected.

I recently inspected a consignment of garden peas from Australia. For some time English seedsmen have experimented with peas grown in that country, but usually these trials have resulted in a failure. The particular lot in question had sweated on the long journey, causing the grains to become white with mould. On inquiry I found that the growths from any lots that may arrive in good condition are usually weak and spindly and the pods much smaller than from seed grown in colder countries. The warmer condition under which they are grown seems to quite take away their natural vigor and hardiness. B. J.

CUCUMBERS IN IOWA.

A correspondent at Castena, Ia., writes: "Few people in the great world ever heard of this little town, yet in its vicinity the bulk of all the cucumber seed sold by all the seed houses of the United States is grown. "There were over 1,000 acres of this vegetable planted in Monona county this year. The seed is planted in long rows, something like cane, and cultivated with a weeder. The work of saving the seed comes in after the cucumbers have turned yellow. They are left in the field and then pulled from the vine by boys and girls, who go into the field with a sort of spoon-shaped trowel and cut open the cucumbers and scoop out the seeds into sacks. The sacks are dragged until they are too heavy, then tied securely. The seed is hauled to the house and poured into large tanks filled with soap and soft water. The mixture cuts the slimy pulp from the seeds, leaving them pure and white. The seeds are dried in kilns in shallow baskets and then sorted and packed.

"The farmers who have been doing this exclusive class of farming say it is profitable, and they have become expert in the growing of this particular seed."

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Market.

Business here is practically at a standstill and stock of all kinds is a glut on the market, mostly due to the presence of chrysanthemums in large numbers of all grades. Prices have kept up fairly well, with the exception of roses, which have proved hardest to move, prices ranging from $1 to $5 per hundred; carnations, $2 to $3; mums, $5 to $15, but in all cases hard to move.

One of the large department stores held a sale of roses, etc., which helped the market greatly and from all accounts did the legitimate business no harm, as it was thought it would by many of the trade.

Referring to notes and illustrations in your last issue, page 1739, concerning Irondequoit muskmelon, this variety was put on the market by James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y., and was named after the market garden section just outside the limits of the city. Since its introduction it has been grown almost to the exclusion of all others, maintaining the best points of parent type, and, while in season, Irondequoit holds the market against all other muskmelons. In form the fruit is nearly round and slightly flattened at the ends. It attains a medium size, has finely netted skin, yellow when ready for market, dark orange-colored flesh, and rich, spicy flavor. The demand has never been satisfied.

The bulb trade is almost over, the dealers report a profitable season and stock is practically cleaned up. Chinese lilies for once are a scarce article.

John House is propagating heavily on geraniums, and, from the appearance of the stock at present, will have some excellent plants for spring trade.

Vegetable Forcing.

At Jevne's, the leading fancy grocer in Chicago, a window of imported grapes attracts much attention. The varieties are those usually grown under glass in England, Muscat of Alexandria and Black Hamburgh.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Boston, Nov. 19.—Mushrooms, 50 cents to $1 lb.; tomatoes, 15 cents to 20 cents lb.; cucumbers, $3 to $9 box; lettuce, 50 cents to 75 cents doz.; parsley, 50 cents to $1 box.

Chicago, Nov. 21.—Cucumbers, 65 cents to $1 doz.; head lettuce, 75 cents doz.; leaf lettuce, 25 cents to 35 cents case.

New York, Nov. 20.—Cucumbers are plentiful and weak; mushrooms in light supply and firm; lettuce firm; radishes steady; tomatoes firm for fancy. Cucumbers, 50 cents to $1 doz.; Boston lettuce, $1.25 to $3.50 per strap; mushrooms, brown, 40 cents to 80 cents lb.; mushrooms, white, 50 cents to $1 lb; parsley, 75 cents to $1 per 100 bunches; radishes, $1 to $2 per 100 bunches; tomatoes, 5 cents to 20 cents per lb.

TROUBLE WITH LETTUCE.

I am having trouble with my lettuce. I have two houses 24x108. There are two side benches with six inches of soil and one center bed on the ground ten inches deep. The trouble begins when the lettuce commences to spread, then the lower leaves get rusty and yellow and the plant forms a hard center. The temperature is from 45 to 50 degrees at night and 55 degrees during the day, sometimes reaching 75 degrees. I use lots of manure and cultivate often. I use the Grand Rapids variety of lettuce. Would it be wise to use nitrate of soda, and if so what is the best way to use it? Also, will a ten horse-power boiler heat a house 24x108 and a house 12x90? I have 1,700 feet of 1½-inch pipe installed and two 2-inch flows using steam.

will get a firmer growth and heavier foliage, which will be better to resist disease. But this is not all your trouble. The high temperature alone would not injure your plants to such a serious extent as you describe. There must be some root trouble which is either due to an unsuitable soil or to lack of drainage in the bench.

Regarding the soil, you say you use lots of manure. Perhaps you use too much. Lettuce is not a heavy feeder and is easily overdone in this respect. Especially is it susceptible to injury when the manure is used in too fresh a condition. You do not say what sort of manure you use. If it is procured from the horse stables it has to be thoroughly rotted down before it is fit to use in lettuce soil. The cowbarn article is preferable for the purpose, but even this should be a year old before being used. A liberal quantity to use in lettuce soil would be one load of manure to five or six of soil, according to the quality of soil being used, the poorer soil of course requiring the larger quantity.

The amount of drainage required will depend largely on the nature of your subsoil. If this is of a gravelly or sandy nature little or no drainage would be required, as you would practically have natural drainage, but when the subsoil is of a stiff, retentive nature or hardpan, which the water would not get through, sufficient drainage would be necessary to insure against stagnation in the bed. And in the case of a low situation it might even be necessary to provide facilities for carrying the water off. This of course relates to your solid bed, which ought to be the best for growing lettuce. On raised benches they seldom prove entirely satisfactory. The Grand Rapids variety is the best and easiest handled as a greenhouse crop.

Regarding nitrate of soda, like sulphate of ammonia this is more of a stimulant than an actual feeder and is beneficial only in carrying a crop through when the soil is exhausted. In a case where the soil already contains sufficient nutriment to sustain the crop, the application of nitrate of soda is apt to do more harm than good. The best way is to use it in water at the rate of one-half ounce per gallon, but in applying it great care should be exercised not to wet the foliage, and especially in preventing it from getting into the hearts of the plants, or damage will be sure to result.

A boiler such as you have should heat your houses easily, even in the coldest weather. W. S. Croydon.

TOMATOES.

It is curious to note how many still cling to the idea that tomatoes are quite a modern fruit, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. I came across a note in one of the daily papers the other day; it stated that though they had now been appreciated for culinary purposes for some years, it was quite a new thing for them to be included with dessert fruits, but it is more than thirty years ago that we grew the currant, the plum, and pear-shaped, and also the smooth, round sorts which were all much appreciated for eating as dessert fruit. A well-ripened tomato, fresh gathered from the plant, is perhaps quite a different flavored fruit from what may be bought at a shop, and it may be owing to this difference that they are not even more extensively eaten as a raw fruit than they are at the present time. Yet year by year they are coming more into use, and growers are more careful to pack those for dessert purposes, so that they reach the consumers in the best condition; yet there is room for further advance in this direction. Or, rather, if they went back to the old days when indoor tomatoes were first getting more extended culture; they were then packed like peaches, a single layer in shallow boxes, and sold by the dozen.

is the earliest, largest and most exquisite colored stock for winter forcing that has ever been introduced. Habit, foliage and color of flowers are entirely distinct from any other strain. The highest praise has been bestowed upon it by those who grew it this past season.

If wanted for Easter, seed should be sown in December. The above strain produces 90 per cent double flowers, the highest percentage of any strain. The following varieties:

Marguerite, pure white.....1-32 oz., 75c
Faust, most exquisite pink.....1-32 oz., 75c
Valentine, delicate lavender.....1-32 oz., 75c
Mephistopheles, fiery red.....1-32 oz., 75c

NEW ORLEANS.

Club Meeting.

At the monthly meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society there also was an informal chrysanthemum show. Several members brought fine flowers for inspection, but the ones which attracted the first attention had been sent by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind. They were perfect in size and finish, George Beach, Lord Salisbury, Amateur Consiel, Lucy Evans and May Seddon being among the best. J. A. Newsham followed closely in quality with Convention Hall, J. C. Neville and others. Abele Bros. had Dr. Enguehard, General Hutton and S. T. Wright. Cook's Sons brought Pullman, Eaton and R. E. Richardson. B. M. Wichers had some good ones. H. Papworth had a fine display of American Beauty and Golden Gate roses. With such a showing of mums it was an easy matter to decide about a flower show for next fall, and a motion by Mr. Lockerbie for that purpose was unanimously carried.

Letters from Mr. Newel and others were received accepting the invitation to deliver lectures on insects and parasites, and a committee was appointed to devise location and time for same.

P. A. Chopin, C. R. Panter and C. W. Eichling were appointed a committee to revise the by-laws of the society. The society has been in existence many years and the membership is increasing.

J. A. Newsham introduced to the members J. Guyot, a practical collector of orchids. This gentleman, who has been working as a florist in different parts of Europe and the United States, is going in a few days to Colombia, being sent by J. A. Newsham to collect orchids, which will be shipped to New Orleans as fast as possible. Mr. Newsham intends to go into the business as a specialty. His long experience in the business, having collected orchids himself in South America and being in charge some years ago of the rare and large collection of the late Onorato, is assurance of success. It seems that the taste for and need of orchid flowers is increasing and no doubt such an enterprise in New Orleans is starting under the best auspices.

Various Notes.

The horticultural inspectors met at a convention in Baton Rouge on November 15. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, A. F. Burgess, of Ohio; secretary, J. B. Smith, of New Jersey.

J. Steckler Seed Co., Ltd., is moving to its new and spacious building, 512 to 516 Gravier street. The store is large and offers more accommodations to their increasing business. M. M. L.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

William Mathews, of Utica, N. Y., has a fine showing of cattleyas. Among them are the rare C. labiata vera., C. gigas and C. Harrisoniæ, the latter a lovely flower, porcelain white, shaded with deep pink. I counted eight flowers on one spike. I also saw a fine specimen of C. Dowiana with Mr. Ballantyne, gardener to Mrs. Thompson at Canandaigua, and C. Bowringeana at Mrs. Kimball's, Rochester, where Colin Ogston has charge.

Frank Baker, who reports a big run on ferns, says he never sold out so clean as this season.

J. B. Keller & Sons, of Rochester, N. Y., are cutting some first class chrysanthemums and have a big stock in sight for the holidays.

F. Schlegel & Sons report an unusually good business thus far.

H. Keitsch & Sons, Buffalo, N. Y., are finishing the decoration of their new store, which when complete will be very handsome. It includes a mantel which will be kept decorated to illustrate different styles. N. M.

...THE...

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The men in the retail cutflower business are so busy they do not have time to eat. Everybody is happy, and it seems florists are the only people I know who are pleased to go hungry. Social functions of all kinds calling for decorations have made things lively, and the retail business along all lines looks encouraging, as many orders are booked ahead and a good season is predicted by all. In the wholesale houses chrysanthemums have been more plentiful than ever before and prices have not been satisfactory, but it is hoped that the worst is over. Roses of all kinds are very plentiful and especially good. Carnations also are more plentiful and violets are the only things which seem scarce.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. has been making shipments of boxwood to Canada and Denver. This green seems to be more appreciated each year.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. have closed their Squirrel Hill greenhouses and are taking them down. The property is too valuable to use for greenhouse purposes.

W. Q. Potter, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., is laid up with pneumonia as a result of exposure while moving their store.

Among the visitors are the Misses Forbes and Donahey, of Wheeling, W. Va.; Daniel E. Gorman, of Williamsport, Pa.; J. H. Orth, of McKeesport, and Geo. L. Huscroft, of Steubenville, stopped on his way to New York.

Hoo-Hoo.

CAMDEN, N. J.—Wm. S. Maull, receiver for L. K. Peacock, Inc., having disposed of the assets, has filed his final report in chancery, and on November 26 will ask an order for final distribution of the assets after meeting legal expenses. What happens in such a case is well illustrated by the fact that the receiver asks $1,000 as compensation, $1,000 as attorney's fees, and $100 as complainant's counsel fee.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

PEYTON & BARNES, Boonville, Mo., will go heavily into the growing of nursery stock for wholesale.

ILGENFRITZ & SONS CO., Monroe, Mich., reports this the busiest fall season the company has had.

THE Illinois State Horticultural Society will hold its fifty-first annual meeting at Champaign December 12 to 14.

ONE of the storage buildings at the C. L. Watrous nursery, Des Moines, Ia., burned November 16. The loss is $3,000.

THE Clinton Falls Nursery Co., Owatonna, Minn., is putting in a new side track connection with the Northwestern railroad.

IF diggers of nursery stock trusted more to the spade and less to the strength of the arms the laborer might be more worthy of his hire.

THE Phoenix Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill., has just acquired sixteen acres adjoining its property in Normal which will be used to increase its output.

THE Northern Illinois Horticultural Society will meet at Joliet December 4 and 5. L. R. Bryant, H. M. Dunlop and other nurserymen have places on the program.

J. A. YOUNG, of the Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill., has completed the planting of the De Kalb county courthouse grounds at Sycamore, Ill. Trees and shrubs to the number of 1,400 were put in.

JOHN WATSON, former secretary of the Pioneer Nursery Co., Salt Lake City, Utah, who has been located at Newark, N. Y., is charged with irregularities in the books, which the president of the company has asked that he return and set right.

A PARTY of twenty-five nurserymen from all parts of the south, members of the National Nut Growers' Association, visited Ocean Springs November 4 to inspect the various pecan nurseries in the vicinity. They were entertained at luncheon by a delegation of citizens.

IT is said that when the nurseries in Tennessee notified their customers of fall shipments they created a famine in postal cards and penny stamps at Smithville, McMinnville, Liberty, Alexandria and Watertown that was reflected in hurry calls on Washington for supplies.

TREE SEEDS IN GERMANY.

Conrad Appel, of Darmstadt, Germany, reports as follows: The home-grown deciduous tree seeds were this year harvested mostly under favorable conditions. Both Acer platanoides and Acer pseudoplatanus are sufficiently grown for the small wants in that article, and obtainable in good quality. Betula alba is very different in quality and for light-colored seeds we have a heavy demand, so that we shall probably see higher prices when the seedsmen are covering their wants.

Carpinus betulus gave a satisfactory result, both with regard to quantity and quality, while Fraxinus excelsior had a perfect failure this year, and wintered seed, which is still obtainable in good quality, must make up for it.

Fagus sylvatica promised at first a poor result only, and according to the information I lately received, the crop will be a failure.

Quercus pedunculata and Quercus rubra are a medium crop in some centers of production and qualities seem to be satisfactory according to the first arrivals. Quercus rubra brings also a good harvest, and fine qualities.

Tilia grandiflora and T. parvifolia are not yet harvested, but my collectors announce a fair average crop, and samples I have seen show a satisfactory quality.

From the evergreen tree seeds which are already harvested, Abies pectinata, gave a perfect failure. Pinus strobus had a short crop in Germany, while the other centers of production announce that new seeds are nearly not obtainable. The crop of the other evergreens, as Larix Europæa, Picea excelsa and Pinus sylvestris, begins next month and seem to be satisfactory.

EMBELLISHMENT OF WAYSIDES.

Avoid Crowding.

For sanitary and hygienic reasons, streets ought not to be too much shaded. The sun should be permitted to shine on the walks, and on the walls of the houses, in turn, as the earth moves in its course. Glimpses of light and shadow, too, have an esthetic value, which is worth considering.

Sixty-five feet apart is the minimum distance, I think, at which street trees should be planted. For large-growing trees, as the elm or soft maple, seventy-five feet or one hundred feet apart would be none too much space to allow. Wayside or highway trees need not be set with the same precision as street trees. An irregular planting, conforming, in general, to the surrounding scenery, would be in better harmony. In places, an accentuation of existing groups of trees may be all that is necessary, or simply a thinning out of overcrowding trees, or of poor trees which are damaging more valuable ones; for let it be an axiom with the tree planter, who is planting for ornamental effect, never to permit the growth of one tree to injure that of another.

An important matter also in the care of trees is the pruning of all broken or diseased limbs or branches, by cutting the limbs off closely at the bole of the tree, leaving no stumps projecting, which the bark cannot grow over, to carry rot into the tree. Cut off smooth, and paint over the wound with coal tar.

If the soil is good, no preparation for planting is necessary, other than loosening up the ground for each tree for a space of from seven to ten feet in diameter, and from two to three feet in depth. When the soil is poor, not less than ten yards of good soil should be substituted for an equal amount of poor soil excavated from the hole. The same loosening up of the ground should be made.

If planting is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well, for on this depends the well-being of the tree. It is safe to say, if you have $20 to spend on planting a tree, let $19.50 of the amount be spent on the preparation of the ground to receive it. It should be borne in mind that the same conditions which will produce a good hill of corn, will grow trees well, and nothing else will serve.

Planting Groups or Masses.

In the planting of groups or masses of trees for ornamental or woodland effect, the soil should be plowed and sub-soil plowed several times. The trees should be planted thickly, always remembering the old gardener's motto: "Plant thickly, but thin quickly." More trees are ruined from crowding than from any other cause. The plantation should be treated precisely as a good farmer would treat a crop of corn. Give clean cultivation. Thick planting gives the advantage of shelter—each tree protects the other—and the further advantage of a greater number of trees from which to select the permanent ones. It also gives the effect of foliage mass the quicker.

These notes are written in the hope that they help to intensify the interest now manifested in the planting and protection of public trees. The subject is of such importance as to merit the earnest attention of all.

The insect question I have not touched upon. This, however, is so exhaustively covered by our entomologists that no one need work in the dark for want of knowledge of how to exterminate insect pests.

PACIFIC COAST.

Chico, Cal.—Prof. P. H. Dorsett, head of the U. S. Department of Agriculture station here, has gone to Washington for a conference with his chiefs.

The anti-Japanese sentiment on the Pacific coast, for a long time strong among growers, has gained such strength in other lines that it has attracted international attention. The feeling against the Japanese appears to be not at all understood in other sections of the United States.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business still continues fair, with a reasonable demand for all classes of stock. The weather is dry and warm, and a heavy rain is needed to give the proper impetus to trade. The retailers are depending to a large extent on the chrysanthemum crop, and as this is hardly up to the standard of former years the effects, judging from the window displays, do not flatter the growers much. Some fine indoor stock is shown from the Burlingame growers, which costs the retailers from $2 to $3 per dozen. With roses there is still a scarcity of fancy stock, but plenty of ordinary quality is in evidence. Brides and Maids net the growers from $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred, with about twice that figure for long-stemmed stock. Beauties wholesale at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Carnations are in abundant supply, with a great percentage of short stock. The weather has been favorable for several weeks, with plenty of sunshine and warm nights. The prices have not changed for the last month, and from present prospects there will be an abundant supply for Thanksgiving at reasonable figures. Other kinds of stock are only in light supply, with the exception of violets, and they are daily becoming more plentiful. Valley is also easier and of splendid quality. A few Paper White narcissi have arrived, also Roman hyacinths. Green stuff is scarcer and the demand for everything in that line is good.

Various Notes.

T. W. Hunter, of the Germain Seed Co., Los Angeles, is in town for a few days.

H. M. Sanborn, of Oakland, has changed the entire front of his Fourteenth street store and now has one of the most attractive stores on the coast.

The California State Floral Society held its regular monthly meeting at Henry P. Tricon's home, 852 Grove street, on November 10. A good attendance listened to a paper by Mrs. A. R. Gunnison, on "The Floriculture of San Francisco, Past and Present." She gave much interesting history from pioneer days down to the present time, and proved herself thoroughly conversant with the topic. Quite a showing was made of outdoor-grown roses, chrysanthemums and other hardy stock. Mrs. Sachan, of San Leandro, showed a nice lot of early-flowering narcissi. The resignation of President F. A. Miller was reluctantly accepted. Mr. Miller has been with the society from its commencement, and has probably done more than any other member to foster the organization, especially in its earlier years. He has been in poor health for some time and has been compelled to relinquish many of his activities. There has been no action taken in regard to a spring exhibition, but this will probably be discussed at the next meeting, which will be held at the same place early next month. G.

CARNATIONS OUTDOORS.

The carnation as a garden flower is not as popular at the present time as it should be and is not given the place it deserves or has held until the last few years. The fact that it has become so well known as a greenhouse flower and so plentiful everywhere in the shops has put a ban on the humbler garden-grown variety. Still the carnation is one of our most satisfactory garden flowers and we have yet to find anything so prolific in blooms and at the same time so easy of cultivation. The carnation with us flowers practically all the year around. In summer the plants are, if they are partially shaded and plenty of moisture applied, better than those from the greenhouses.

The best results are always obtained from young plants. They should be planted early in the spring in a well-drained situation, partially shaded if possible and in soil that is not too heavy. This latter condition is just the opposite from that demanded by roses to get the best results. I have, however, had fair results from some varieties of carnations planted in black, heavy ground, but they are not long-lived usually. Much more satisfaction will be had from them if the soil is of a lighter nature. They do not root deeply and for that reason should be given plenty of material to feed on. Work in a good quantity of well-rotted manure about twice during the season. Keep the ground and the plants well watered, and good results will follow. They should be planted in beds by themselves and not mixed up with other shrubbery. Keep well staked and, as I stated before, give a partial shade if possible. The plants will grow well enough in the sun, but it is impossible to get any perfect flowers from the pink varieties on account of sunburn. The white, scarlet and variegated do not burn so easily, however, and do well even in the hottest weather.

On account of the fondness of the gopher for this class of plants, many people have ceased to attempt to cultivate them. And as gophers are our most popular pests, they have to be reckoned with. I have seen these chaps fooled by planting the carnations in well-perforated oil cans, or in small baskets made of wire netting, but gophers can be gotten rid of by the use of strychnine and carrot and a little patience in a short time.

Thrip is occasionally very annoying to outdoor carnations. Some years we do not see much of it, but it is always more or less prevalent in the summer. With the use of plenty of water in the plants it can easily be kept in check. I have had little difficulty in cutting quantities of good substantial flowers throughout the summer when much of the inside stock was below the standard. G.

APPLES IN THE NORTHWEST.

Three hundred carloads of apples were sent out by the growers in the Grande Ronde valley in northeastern Oregon, south of Spokane this season. There are 2,000 acres of orchards in the valley but many of these are under three years. More orchards will be made this winter and next spring.

The Grande Ronde valley is a peculiarly favored locality for apple growing. Hood river is another, and so are Wenatchee and the Yakima valley in Washington. There never has been a crop failure in the valley, but those who planted the orchards generally made two expensive errors: They planted too many trees to the acre, and selected too wide a diversity of varieties. However, the latter mistake has resulted in clearly demonstrating the varieties certain to yield the greatest profit, and the new orchards are being limited to apples that experience has proven will bring the biggest returns. These are the Gano, the Rome Beauty and the York Imperial.

While the rainfall in the Grande Ronde valley averages only about ninteen inches a year, it is ample for the needs of winter apple trees, and few of the orchards are irrigated. Irrigation tends to bunch the roots of the tree near the surface of the ground, for the simple reason the roots do not have to go deep into the soil for moisture. As a result irrigated trees lack the sturdiness necessary to resist heavy winds, and are apt to at least lean noticeably. The trees in the non-irrigated orchards of the Grande Ronde valley stand erect, and their symmetry is commented upon by all visiting fruit growers. Water is found almost anywhere in the valley, at a depth from nine to twelve feet, so that the roots speedily grow deep into damp soil. The Grande Ronde apples first came into notice at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893.

AUSTIN, TEX.

Current Comment.

The season at Austin, Texas, has been remarkable. Up to this date we have had no frost and during October less than an inch of rain, with the result that only those who could irrigate have anything growing outside their greenhouses. The dry season has produced a large cotton crop and exceptionally good opportunity to gather it. Cotton is now green and blooming, and looks far too beautiful for a mere commercial crop.

The new Austin Floral Co. has opened its business in a large plate-glass-fronted store, near Eighth street on Congress avenue. The firm is composed of A. J. Seiders, O. Olsson and Robert Lawson. All are practical florists and popular men.

The Hyde Park Floral Co. has done a splendid business all summer, getting most of its flowers from F. T. Ramsey's flower farm, which he cultivates largely for pleasure in connection with his nursery. He irrigates from surface wells, and maintains a driveway the entire length of the garden and experimental grounds, that the public may enjoy their beauty.

The State University has built an addition to its greenhouse, 16x30 feet, and has installed a hot water heating plant.

The greenhouse plant of Charles Alf & Co., in the eastern part of the city, has been enlarged by two new houses this summer.

Mums and carnations are just arriving, the weather until recently having been too warm. H. B.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Current Comment.

The bright weather of the last week has succeeded in forcing in a lot of mums, some of the late varieties being from ten days to two weeks ahead of time. Consequently a glut has been experienced. The Tomlinson flower market presented a brignt appearance Saturday morning, there being thousands of blooms exhibited, from the largest to the smallest and in all colors. Rain falling early in the afternoon and getting heavier towards night spoiled all chance of a good market day. Carnations are coming in greater quantity and quality improving every day. The same can also be said of roses.

Wiegand & Sons have an effective window decoration, one of the prettiest they have ever put up.

Bertermann Bros. report a large attendance at their opening last week, and they certainly deserved it, as they exhibited a lot of fine flowers and plants.

Homer Wiegand spent a few days in Posey county among the quail and rabbits. He is one of the champion wing shots among the florists here.

Visitors this week were: William Walker, of Louisville, Ky.; Mr. Elverson, of Pittsburg, and S. M. Harbison, of Danville, Ky. S.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The flower show last week brought out thousands of visitors and these helped the retailers dispose of surplus stock. There is plenty of design work, as there have been a number of weddings and banquets. Roses are not as plentiful, while carnations are arriving in large quantities. Violets are still scarce. A great many artificial designs are being made up for the holidays, but there is not much holly to be had.

There was a glut of chrysanthemums in the market Saturday.

Various Notes.

P. B. Welch had the sale of the flowers at the show and did fairly well.

Halliday Bros. made a fine showing of decorative plants at the exhibit.

N. Gray, Catonsville, has his three houses stocked and ready for business.

Robert L. Graham has a fine lot of Harrisii lilies.

Kirkley & Sons have moved from Light street to 906 South Charles street, two doors below Albert Fiedler & Co.

George Rileigh has a large black dog on the street with a sign marked, "Rich garden soil for sale." The dog also has a hat on, trimmed with lily of the valley. J. L. T.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

There is little change in the condition of business over that of a week ago. We have passed the stage of worship for the queen of autumn; the question now is to dispose of her at a reasonable price. The best quality of blooms is now arriving and inferior stock is going slow. Roses and carnations are showing great improvement in quality, and indications points to a good supply of both for Thanksgiving. A leading retail dealer says we are getting all the New York violets we need. That seems to be the situation all around, and it may be added that they are good enough for anybody and retail readily at $2 per hundred.

Various Notes.

W. F. Gude, Peter Bisset and Otto Bauer acted as judges at the Baltimore show last week.

J. H. Small, Jr., was recently re-elected as a director of the Washington Board of Trade by a flattering vote. Every one of Mr. Small's days is a busy one, as, in addition to the management of an extensive retail trade, his other business and fraternal duties make ever-increasing demands on his time.

President Bisset, of the Florists' Club, says that matters are progressing finely in regard to arrangements for the rose show to be held in this city in March, 1907. President Bisset says he is sure we will have a good show.

Will Arnold, now of the George Reinberg establishment, Chicago, made the trip to this city and Alexandria, Va., to testify in the suit of J. Louis Loose against the Southern railroad. Mr. Arnold was formerly rose-grower at the Loose range. A. F.

HILLSBORO, OHIO.

Three years ago Simon J. Hider started in business in a house 9x10. The second year he began to read the Review and kept on the safe side of the credit column. Today he has one house 11x30, one 20x30 and one 10x20, all up-to-date, full of first-class stock, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. He is practically free from debt, and if everything comes out as he expects by the beginning of 1907 he will be clear. He says he owes his success to the Review and to the firms with whom he has dealt. He expects to build a house in the spring for carnations only.

Goshen, Ind.—The Goshen Floral Co. is building a two story cement block building, 25x44 feet, and making an addition of 100 feet to its present greenhouses.

Enchantress

Unquestionably the grandest carnation ever introduced. For the past three years, cut flowers from my stock have wholesaled at an average advance of $1.00 to $3.00 per 100 over regular market quotations for fancy stock, owing to enormous size, perfect form and brilliant coloring. Over 35,000 cuttings of this variety sold last season with absolute satisfaction.

Orders booked now for December and later delivery. I guarantee my customers strong, healthy, thoroughly rooted cuttings; liberal count, careful packing, prompt shipment and the finest stock they ever saw. $2.00 per 100; $18.00 per 1000.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business last week was good. The season is scarcely up to last year, but the reason is easily explained, for, as one retailer said, last year there were from fifty to seventy-five large entertainments for debutantes, while this year the number has scarcely reached twenty-five. Mums still are being received in large quantities, but the days of the oversupply are numbered and in a few days I expect to see the price raise to what it ought to be. I believe that the late demand will be good this year, and from present prospects the price will be satisfactory. Roses are in oversupply, and with the single exception of American Beauties the price has dropped. Some fine stock of all varieties are to be had, but until the mum is on the wane they will not bring the price they ought to. Carnations are none too plentiful and sell well. Violets are also scarce and in demand. Narcissus is beginning to come and sells fairly well. This market is now well supplied with greens.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Lenora Gillett, mother of E. G. Gillett, died at the residence of the latter in this city Sunday, November 18. The funeral took place Tuesday at Springfield, O. Mrs. Gillett was almost 80 years old and died virtually of old age.

L. H. Kyrk spent several days in Indianapolis, Ind., during the last week.

Mrs. George Murphy is seriously ill with typhoid fever. George Murphy is just able to be about after a siege of the same disease. C. J. Ohmer.

ERIE, PA.

All of the Erie florists say that business was poor last week. There was not much call for roses or carnations. Cheap mums go best, but large, high-priced ones sell slowly.

L. A. Spoden has rented Mrs. Neimeyer's place for five years more and is building a new cottage on the premises.

The Schluraff Floral Co. is talking of moving its greenhouses to the western part of the city.

F. M. Feasler has built two more houses for vegetables.

Zuck Bros. have built two houses for lettuce and early vegetables. W. H.

Milwaukee is to have a new park, located in the Fifth ward. The site was selected at a mass-meeting of residents of the ward and cost $50,000.

Beatrice, Neb.—The Dole Floral Co. is marketing its celery. The crop is fine, and the supply less than the demand.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The market last week was deluged with chrysanthemums, and the demand was not any too brisk. As they are coming in in such large numbers, prices are not as good as what we expected to get. Roses are off crop with some of the leading growers, although the demand has not been very heavy. Trade seems to run almost entirely to chrysanthemums. Carnations are much better. Enchantress is the best variety on the market, although only being cut in small numbers. Violets are scarce; some of the growers who had excellent success with them last year are cutting but few. In consequence, eastern violets are being used more extensively than heretofore. Chrysanthemum plants do not seem to sell.

Minneapolis.

Saturday maroon and yellow chrysanthemums sold well on account of the football game between Minnesota and Carlisle, maroon and gold being the Minnesota colors.

Julius Rieck has his store in readiness to open some day this week. As he is situated on Washington avenue North and is some distance from any other dealer he will no doubt be favored with a fair amount of trade.

Carlson & Sandberg are cutting some fine Brides and Maids.

St. Paul.

H. Krinke & Sons are somewhat disappointed with their carnations. They, however, have been cutting some fine pink mums, which have sold well.

The Hill wedding took place November 21, the decorations being divided between two of our florists. FELIX.

MARLBOROUGH, N. Y.

Velie Bros. have their plant in fine shape. They have two houses of violets containing 8,000 plants. They have also three houses of carnations containing 12,000 plants of such varieties as Enchantress, Nelson Fisher, Mrs. Lawson, Robert Craig, Cardinal, Red Sport, Octoroon, White Perfection, Lady Bountiful, M. A. Patten and Queen. All are free of disease and are loaded with buds for the holidays.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—Thomas C. Ruston, who is one of the county commissioners, enjoys the esteem and confidence of the public to a marked degree. His public duties receive the same careful attention that has made his private enterprises so successful.

Prepare for Thanksgiving and the Holidays

WATCH! PROSPERITY! LOOK!

Election is now over, the country settled to its normal condition. Great Prosperity is in sight for us all; why not for you? A little fortune lays in front of your door; grab it now when you have a chance. Look at others; see how successful they are. Why? Because they are wide-awake, they watch every opportunity and take advantage of bargains. A big demand is in sight now and for the holidays for the much-admired Decorative Plants.

Araucaria Excelsa, Araucaria Excelsa Glauca and Araucaria Compacta Robusta. Where have you thought of buying them? Surely from a man who makes a specialty of importing araucarias and who can offer you Bargains. Godfrey Aschmann is the man. He has had the reputation for the last ten years of being the great IMPORTER and DEALER in araucarias of America. Prices are slaughtered one half. Never have been offered so low in the history of araucaria cultivation. Why is that? Simply for the reason to obtain room for the cultivation of our great Easter stock. About 5,000 araucarias, together with an immense stock of ferns, palms, rubbers, Gloire de Lorraine begonias, azaleas and thousands of other plants which must be sold by Christmas.

TAKE NOTICE!

Araucaria Excelsa, Glauca, Compacta, Robusta, only spring importations are offered raised in pots all summer and can be shipped safely.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5½-in. pots, about 15 to 18 inches high, 4 to 5 tiers, 3 years old, 60c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 18 to 23 inches high, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 years old, 75c; 6-in. pots, 23 to 25 inches high, 5 to 7 tiers, 4 years old, $1.00; 6 to 7-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 5 to 7 tiers, 4 years old, $1.25; 7-in. pots, specimen plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta—Have several thousand of them; can supply all wants. These plants were never so fine in shape and condition as this year. The pet of the greenhouse. 6-in. pots, 3 tiers, 20 to 25 inches across, 12 to 18 inches high, 3 years old, $1.00 to $1.25; 6 to 7-in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 18 to 25 inches high, 4 years old, $1.50 to $1.75; 7-in. pots, specimens, 6 to 7 tiers, 25 to 30 inches high, 5 years old, $2.00 to $2.50.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca—This variety on account of its beautiful green-bluish tiers, dwarf habit, fine compact shape, gives it a striking appearance, and anybody seeing them, must undoubtedly fall in love with them at sight. 6-in. pots, 3 tiers, 20 to 30 inches across, 14 to 20 inches high, 3 years old, $1 00 to $1.25; 6 to 7 in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 20 to 30 inches high, 4 years old, $1.50 to $1.75; 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high, 5 years old, specimen plants, $2.00 to $2 50. These plants are as broad as long and the finest you ever saw.

Cocos Weddelliana, 15c.

Areca Lutescens, 5-in. pots, 24 in. high, made-up with 3 plants, 35c; 4-in. pots, 20 to 24 in. high, made-up with 3 plants, 25c each.

OUR LITTLE PETS

From Aschmann, in Philadelphia, we bought
An araucaria, a pet for our little girl.
Now we have two pets, the pride of our thought:
The little girl so sweet, a head full of curls,
And the araucaria with its everlasting green—
A more joyful home you never have seen.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large size plant about 45 to 48 inches high in the center and three smaller sizes, 25 to 30 inches high around it, which gives them a good appearance, $2.00 to $2 50 each; 6-in. pots, single plants, 36 to 45 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 each; 6-in pots, 32 to 36 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.00 each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 years old, 30 inches high, 5 good leaves, 75c each; 4-in. pots, made-up plants, 3 plants in a pot, 18 to 25 inches high, 25c, 30c, 35c.

Ficus Elastica or Rubber Plants, 6-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 40c to 50c.

Areca Sapida, just imported from Belgium, something new, very attractive, looks like a Kentia, 25 in. high, 50c each.

Asparagus Plumosus Nanus, 4-in. pots, large bushy, 10c to 12c.

FERNS, all raised in pots and not on benches as follows:

Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 7-in. pots as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1 00 each; 6-in. pots, large, ready for 7-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 5-in., 35c; 4-in., 25c.

Boston Ferns, 7-in., very bushy, only 75c; 6-in., 50c or $5.00 per dozen; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 4-in., 20c.

Nephrolepis Scottii, 8-in., as big as a washtub, worth $2.00, now $1.25; 7-in., as big as a bushel basket, worth $1.25, now 75c; 6-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 4-in., 20c.

Ferns for dishes, 3-in., 6c; 2½-in., 5c.

Nephrolepis Elegantissima, 5-in. pots, 30c.

Jerusalem Cherries (or Solanum), 6 to 7-in. pots, very bushy, full of berries, from $3.00 to $6.00 per dozen.

Dracaena Bruanti (imported), 30 in. high. 6-inch pots, 50c; $5.00 per dozen.

Cyclamen, will bloom for Christmas, 5-in. pots, 20c; 4-in. pots, 12c.

Chinese Primroses, 4-in. pots, ready to shift into 5-in., will bloom for Christmas, $8.00 per 100; 5¼-in., $2.00 per doz.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, 6-in. pots 50c; blooms in December, 3-in., 20c.

Begonia Flambeau, sells on sight, 4-in., ready for a shift into 6-in., 20c.

Begonia Erfordii, new improved, blooms all winter through, 4-in., 15c.

Azalea Indica, just arrived, selected by myself on my recent trip to Belguim. Have all the leading varieties, such as Deutsche Perle, Simon Mardner, and Vervæneana. These three sorts are good for Christmas-forcing. Later varieties: Empress of India, Oroff, Wolters, Niobe, Bernard Andre Alba, Mme. Van der Cruyssen, and many others. Price as follows: 35c, 40c, 50c, 60c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Hydrangea Otaksa, only pot-grown is offered, sure success for Easter-forcing, 6-in. pots 25c; 7 to 8-in., 50c.

STEAM TRAPS.

Can a steam trap be used efficiently in returning condensed steam to the boiler when the boiler is run under a pressure of five to ten pounds? My two houses are only about two feet higher than the boiler-house foundation. Will a trap be practicable in a small place of 8,000 feet of glass? G. H. S.

Yes, the steam trap can be made to do the work desired on a low pressure system. If a minimum pressure of six pounds is maintained there will be no difficulty in securing good service.

L. C. C.

PIPING TWO HOUSES.

Kindly advise me how to pipe two houses, 15x100, in order to maintain a temperature of about 60 degrees in zero weather. I wish to use 2-inch pipe. My houses extend east and west and are six feet high on the north side and four feet high on the south side. New Jersey climate. C. J. R.

Each of the houses 15x100 feet should contain eleven runs of 2-inch pipe. This can be arranged in two coils, one of six pipes on the north side and one with five pipes on the south side. The large coil should consist of a 2-inch flow-pipe from the boiler to the far end of the house, where the flow should enter a manifold, carrying five 2-inch returns. The other coil should consist of one 2-inch flow arranged the same as the above, and four 2-inch returns. The boiler to supply heat for these houses should be rated to carry at least 2,000 square feet of radiation, or a like number of lineal feet of 4-inch pipe.

A QUESTION OF PIPING.

Please state the number of flows and returns of 2-inch pipe needed to heat two houses to 50 degrees, where the temperature occasionally falls to 15 degrees below zero. One house is 16x60, walls four feet high, ridge nine feet, east end protected. The second house is 22x40, connected to the first house on the south, north well protected. T. B.

From the size of pipe mentioned I judge you wish to heat the houses in question with hot water. These estimates are based on maintaining a temperature of 50 degrees with hot water at 180 degrees. The house 16x60 should be provided with nine runs of 2-inch pipe. This can be built in two coils, one

NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans is the headquarters for the cypress lumber industry. Through the Louisiana swamps there are many mills turning out cypress lumber in great quantity, but so great is the demand that they are not able to keep stock ahead, and the selling interests are intrusted to a concern owned by the mills and called the Cypress Selling Co., which sees to it that each mill has its proportion of orders, based on its capacity, and that each buyer gets supplies in proportion to his needs.

The cypress used for greenhouse purposes is open-air dried at the mills, and there now are great quantities of cypress piled awaiting curing before delivery to the concerns manufacturing greenhouse material. One of the interesting facts is that there are 500,000 feet of pecky cypress awaiting shipment to the Adam Schillo Lumber Company, Chicago, for use as greenhouse benches. Pecky cypress is now almost universally used for greenhouse benches, as it can be sold as cheap as any other lumber and far outlasts hemlock. It is dried here in the open air until it weighs three pounds to the board foot, anything heavier than this having too much sap to be in the right condition for use.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

With the advent of colder weather, business is improving. There is a noticeable scarcity of roses, most of our growers stating that their stock is now off crop. Perhaps it is well, in view of the fact that the market is flooded with chrysanthemums, low in price and grand in quality. There is no great demand for large specimen blooms of such varieties as T. Eaton and Yellow Eaton, although an occasional wedding decoration calls for a quantity of this stock. Our best selling sorts are Major Bonnaffon, Pink and White Ivory, Jerome Jones and Appleton. At retail they command from $1 to $2 per dozen; at wholesale from $6 to $8 per hundred. Carnations are plentiful and show the effects of cloudy weather and undue forcing, it being almost impossible to keep them from sleeping. Ordinary stock brings $1 to $1.50 per hundred, fancies $2 to $3. Violets are not up to standard in quality, nor are they likely to be until we get more sunshine. Prices range from 40 cents to 75 cents per hundred.

Among the Trade.

The opening last week of the largest retail drug store in New England brought a demand for several thousand chrysanthemums and carnations which were gratuitously distributed as souvenirs. Such business enterprise is commendable.

Alexander Rennie, of the late firm of Rennie & Pino, seedsmen, has leased a store on Washington street and is preparing to open a modern retail seed store within a few days. W. S. Pino will continue business at the old location.

James Crawshaw, the originator and grower of the beautiful new Asparagus Crawshawii, reports an enormous demand for sprays and strings of his favorite specialty. This new asparagus, while a sport from A. plumosus nanus, is in every respect an improvement over the parent stock. It should be seen to be appreciated. Grown under conditions which usually are given plumosus, it makes almost twice the growth, the foliage being finer and more dense. Either as a decorative plant or as a money-maker for a grower of greens, it is the finest thing the writer has yet seen. It is the only stock Mr. Crawshaw grows in quantity.

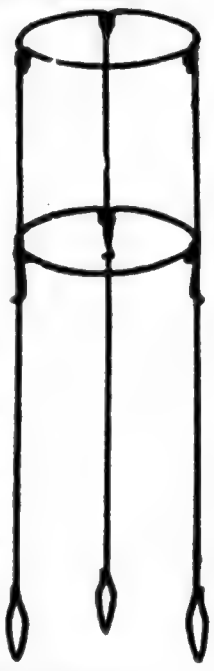
The Test of Products

HERE is a test that every florist and grower can make for himself as the construction of your house vitally affects the stock you grow. If your houses are not built right you cannot expect to turn out perfect plants.



Does your house produce the amount of stock and the kind of stock it should? Let us furnish you the material for your next house and then make a test—we only ask for a trial order. Our catalogue will tell you more.

and reap the lifetime of satisfaction its service brings. It is made from "everlasting" cypress, found only in the Louisiana swamps, which beats the world for durability and wearing qualities in the very hardest service.

Along with this, our scientific hooping plans bind the tank so strongly together it is safe against leaking or bursting.

The Caldwell tank holds water to its capacity as long as you have use for it. It is doing it for others. Why not for you? Send for illustrated catalogue.

Doubtless, you have been waiting a long time for ventilating apparatus at a reasonable cost before equipping your houses, or a line that does the work so satisfactorily that it is a pleasure to have in the house. Our customers are all highly pleased with the service we give them. We are quite certain that our prices will suit you. At least give us a chance to figure with you.

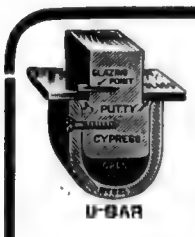
"GOOD ENOUGH"



is one kind of argument but better still is a still better one. There are a lot of florists hanging on to the old forms and ways of greenhouse construction because they are "good enough." We are looking after the florist who wants the top notch of efficiency in greenhouse construction, at a price right for the right thing.

IMAGINE your show room greenhouse being a construction with 24-inch spacing of glass—no gutters at the eave, a beautiful free curve instead—every part glistening with aluminum paint, always free from mildew—a regular greenhouse show case that gives to your plants an effect of freedom—impressing your customers as a charm spot. That's the kind of show room the U-Bar Construction makes. PEOPLE who know a good thing when they see it, and will take advantage of the same, must be possessed with good judgment and are generally successful. One of our successful growers has this year taken out 6000 feet of wooden gutters, which were only 5 years old, and replaced the same with 6000 feet of the GARLAND IRON GUTTER, this being his fifth annual order.

Ear Marks AND Trade Marks

EAR MARKS are the things themselves—the points of superiority—the unmistakable points that at once mark a firm's productions.

TRADE MARKS are marks on the ear marks—a sort of protection or sign of warning against imitations and a surety to the buyer of a standard excellence.

YOU KNOW our ear marks and now we want you to know our trade mark.

You won't find it on our houses or boilers, but on all the bits of interesting printing we put out. We want to brand it on your mind—"L & B"—and the good-sensed, practical, superior greenhouses and equipment for which it stands.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Poinsettias.

Our beautiful mums will soon be things of the past and then for many long months we will have only their literature and memory to remind us of the gorgeous blossoms of the last two months. With plenty of benchroom our attention will be centered on the flowering plants that we expect to sell at Christmas, for that holiday, like Easter, has gradually been growing more of a plant event.

How are your leading crops looking? Will they be just right for Christmas? Keep your pans and pots of poinsettias in a night temperature of 60 degrees. If not kept lower than that there should be no losing their foliage. Lack of heat is not the cause of loss of foliage so often as is exhaustion of the soil or too much water, which causes the roots to perish. Weak liquid manure occasionally may help to preserve the leaves, but if the roots, or the majority of them, are decayed, there is nothing to be done but resolve to do better next year.

If you think you have not enough pans made up and should be lucky enough to have plants in 4-inch pots, don't attempt to put them in the pans now, for the slight disturbance of roots that will occur even with a careful transplanting will bring off every leaf. Wait until they are ordered and then your customer will have the plant at least for a few days.

About this time is pretty sure to appear the dirty, greasy, mealy bug. It clusters among the nectar cups and at the base of the bracts. It is not only offensive to the sight, but if allowed to vegetate will impair the development of the bracts, which many people think are the flower. In most flowers the nectar cup is absent or very obscure, but in the poinsettia it may be said that they are abnormal in development, and this accounts for the brilliant bracts to attract the insects to feed on the abundance of nectar.

Last year we tried to kill the bugs with a spray of nicotine, a rather strong decoction, but these dirty creatures only considered it a free lunch. The only thing we know of to do, if this pest appears, is to take each plant and, while one man holds the plant, another directs a strong, sharp stream from the hose into the center of the head. Do this on the path of the greenhouse or the bugs may crawl back.

Azaleas for Christmas.

I advised some weeks ago that shortly after the arrival of your imported azaleas you should put into a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees a few varieties that will flower at Christmas. They are Deutsche Perle, Hexe, Simon Mardner and Vervæneana. The first two are such excellent varieties to force that they may be slightly early. If showing color now, remove to a temperature of 55 degrees and no harm will be done. I again call your attention to that grand variety, Hexe. The habit of the plant, its brilliant color, a dark red, and the ease with which it forces makes it one of our most valuable Christmas plants. Simon Mardner and Vervæneana are not likely to be any too early.

Early Lilies.

The Bermuda lily is a very important flower to us from Christmas on, both for decorating and designs. It requires a strong heat. On a visit last year from Charles H. Roney, of the Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., which was a week or two before Thanksgiving, he told me he would have 15,000 flowers ready for that important date. I remarked, "You must have given them a high temperature." He replied, "Yes. Don't be afraid of that. They will stand 90 degrees." We will have a few for Thanksgiving, but look for a good cut at the holidays.

Just before the buds are visible is the time when the greenfly gets in its work. Do not wait to see these minute creatures, but syringe into the center of the rosette of leaves a weak solution of some tobacco extract. Instructions as to the strength come with them all. In applying any of the insecticides is where the compressed air sprayer comes in useful. Keep your lilies going and rather increase than decrease the temperature.

Cyclamen.

The cyclamen has of late become a popular Christmas plant, and very worthily so, for there are few better house plants and in the better strains now on the market the foliage is as attractive as in many of our so-called ornamental-leaved plants. We have tested rather accurately the temperature that best suits the cyclamen when about to bloom. We found that at 50 degrees they were rather slow to flower, and at 60 degrees they drew up rather weak; then giving them 55 degrees with full light we found what we considered the ideal. The writer is not a believer in such fine distinctions in temperature, especially with different varieties of one species, like the carnation. Nevertheless, that was our experience with the cyclamen. As the pretty foliage of the cyclamen is now a desirable attribute of the plant, they should be given plenty of space to develop, not only their attractive foliage, but also the symmetrical form of the plant, and, therefore, when you select plants for flowering at Christmas, for which the earliest flowers should now be showing color, it is worth while to put these selected plants on inverted 6-inch pots. If tobacco stems are plentiful with you, spread two or three inches between the pots. It will keep down aphis and there will not be the necessity of that disagreeable duty of smoking. The average florist likes best to smoke out of a briarroot or meerschaum, as, when irrigation is necessary in dry seasons, he thinks his own throat needs it worst.

Other Christmas Stock.

You know all about that most useful cheap plant, the sweet stevia, Stevia serrata. We never have enough to last over to New Year's. Don't cut it now for anyone and keep it down close to the freezing point. Have a good lot of Paper White and Roman hyacinths in for Christmas. If there is any money in these bulbs it is at that joyous time. If you brought in your Paper Whites three or four weeks ago, don't think they are going to be too early. Keep them cool and let every flower be developed and then this inexpensive bulb is of great value to the florist.

ROSES

PROPAGATING.

In selecting wood for propagating purposes some growers advocate taking flowering stems in preference to blind wood, under the impression that this class of wood will produce a heavier cut of blooms of a higher grade. Having experimented carefully along these lines for some years I found so little difference in the quantity and quality of cut that I am content to use good blind wood from near the top of the bush, where it has been exposed to the rays of the sun and where it could enjoy a free circulation of air.

Using flowering wood is also rather an expensive experiment, as during the season of propagation blooms command the best price and few of us care to curtail our cut during short days, when even the best of cuts produce fewer blooms than we wish.

The wood should be put into water as soon as possible after being taken from the plant, not merely dipping the ends into the water, but immersing it deeply. The wood should not be allowed to stand too long in the water, as this will produce that weak condition called "water heart," fatal to the result we wish.

The process of making the cutting and inserting it in the bench, while demanding care and attention, is simplicity itself. The after care of the bench and house, being of the utmost importance in successfully raising the stock, will demand a greater amount of care and diligence.

For ordinary purposes cuttings of three eyes make nice, thrifty plants; even cuttings of two eyes, if handled properly, make nice plants in a short time. Having all the cuttings of a uniform size with the same number of eyes will tend to better success than if the sizes and quality are indiscriminate.

Use a knife with a keen edge and make a short slice, as the cleaner the cut and the smaller the wound so much quicker will the callus form and the arrangement of the young rootlets will be more perfect.

The cuttings should never be allowed to become dry from the time they are taken from the plant until root formation has taken place, and during the process of making the cuttings frequent sprinkling is necessary in order to keep them in the best condition. The sand or other medium should be pounded moderately firm and should not exceed four inches in depth.

As uniform conditions are more likely to exist half way between the surface and the bottom of the bench, the ends of the cuttings should reach to that depth and should have the material firmly pressed around them. The end of every cutting should reach the bottom of the cut made to receive them, as any cutting not so placed will take a longer time to root.

The bench should then be thoroughly watered and, if exposed to bright sunshine, should be lightly shaded with cheesecloth, removing the shading just as soon as the sun ceases to shine on the bench. The temperature of the material in the bench should be about 62 degrees and the house temperature at least 10 degrees lower, so that while root formation is in progress the eyes may be discouraged from breaking and making wood.

By carefully attending watering, shading and temperatures, the cutting will be ready to pot in twenty-eight or thirty days. Ribes.

BABY RAMBLER ROSE.

Have a lot of two-year dormant Baby Rambler roses just potted. A few of these are wanted in bloom just as soon as possible. How far ought they to be cut back? They are in cold houses to start, temperature 45 to 50 degrees.

E. L.

Your treatment of roses is all right. Start slowly in a cool house if just lifted from the field. Do not cut back the wood of these roses anything like as severely as you would a hybrid perpetual. In fact, only the unripe tops of the stronger growths need be cut back and then only back to the firm ripe wood. Any old wood that flowered last spring should be cut away entirely. W. S.

MALFORMED BUDS.

Can you tell us why our Bride and Maid buds come deformed? The center of the flower does not push out, although the outer petals are formed fairly well. The flowers were good up to three or four weeks ago; then came a short period of deformed flowers, say about three or four days, after which they came good for two weeks, then again a few poor cuts. The temperature in the houses had been as low as 56 degrees at night, with warm days. The soil is a heavy loam with one-quarter cow manure. The plants look healthy, the foliage being a dark green and leathery. The first cold nights had no fires and in the mornings plants would be wet.

J. N.

It is possible that the check received by these roses during the first cold spell may have something to do with the malformation of the buds, although it would be more likely to first show its effects on the foliage.

Roses are more apt to act in this manner from overfeeding with material containing an excess of ammonia, such as using bone meal and lime in combination, or any material that will release the ammonia in the manure or mulch more rapidly than the plants can use it.

A temperature of 56 degrees, especially with a small crack of air on, while it would retard the development of the blooms and so shorten the cut, would rather tend to improve the quality of the bud than otherwise, so the trouble cannot be attributed to that.

Make an investigation as to the quality of food supply, as I am convinced the cause originates there. Ribes.

MILDEW.

I am troubled with mildew on my roses. I have a house fifty feet long, with about 400 rose plants. The soil is sod plowed up in autumn and piled up until the following spring with one-quarter of cow manure. I have good drainage. The roses were planted in July. The temperature at night runs from 50 to 60 degrees without ventilation and it runs up to 80 or 90 degrees in the daytime when there is sunshine, with ventilators wide open. When night comes I close the ventilators and the temperature drops to 70 degrees.

My house is a three-quarter-span, Lord & Burnham steel-frame construction, with ventilators on one side. The house is close to the river, which runs north and south, the house east and west. The house is 100 feet long, divided equally, the half for carnations being next the river. During a heavy fog I often dust the pipes with sulphur. When it rains I close the ventilators. My roses began to mildew in September. T. R. D.

The trouble with these roses arises, neither from the quality of the soil, style of house nor its proximity to the river, but is caused solely and entirely by lack of ventilation at night.

Time and again I have pointed out in these columns that this stagnant atmosphere is the very condition suited for the germination of the spores of mildew, and so long as this condition prevails mildew will stay in the house, in spite of sulphur or any other preventive.

Keep the air in circulation by leaving on a crack of air whenever possible, even at the expense of a few more tons of coal, but close the ventilators if there is danger of rain getting in. Be careful to have the watering and syringing done early enough in the day to allow the foliage to become dry before sundown. When giving ventilation during the morning be careful to raise the sashes a little at a time—never so much at once as to appreciably affect the temperature of the house, and reduce during the afternoon with the same care.

As an aid in banishing this pest keep the pipes painted with the sulphur mixture and dust the foliage once a week with a mixture of lime and sulphur, one-third lime and two-thirds sulphur. Apply with the blower. Ribes.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

PRIZE DESIGNS.

It hardly ever fails that where cut flower work is part of a flower show the retailers' displays are among the most attractive features of the exhibition. The table decorations have a special fascination for the public, but many are the retailers who have received orders for funeral pieces or a bride's bouquets with the comment, "Make one like that you had at the flower show." The retailers' displays are too frequently the only artistic feature of an exhibition.

At the Ontario horticultural exhibition at Toronto, floral designs always are given a leading place in the schedule. The accompanying illustrations are the three prize-winners at the show held early this month, and they will serve to demonstrate to florists that at Toronto they make as finished floral work as in any metropolitan community south of the Dominion line. These were the work of J. S. Simmons and it is interesting to note that lily of the valley was largely used in each of his pieces. It is, of course, almost the only material at this season, unless orchids are used, for making bridal bouquets. It was necessarily good valley that Simmons used, but it will be noted that in his bridal bunch he employed scarcely any foliage, not nearly so much as would be used by the average maker-up. For his encircling green he used Asparagus plumosus. The shower consists of only a few ribbons, in which valley spikes are tied, as the effect would be too heavy if more were used combined with the lace scarf which is now so popular for tying all sorts of bouquets.

As at other shows, the table decoration was the center of attraction. Cattleyas, dendrobiums and valley were used, with Asparagus plumosus for the green. The center-piece was in a large silver bowl, which was just a little high for the purpose.

The prize design was a cushion on an easel. This is simply a variation of the old-fashioned pillow, but as worked out by Mr. Simmons was decidedly unique and pleasing. The top of the pillow was made solid and then the pattern worked on it with cattleyas and valley. The illustration hardly does justice to the piece, as the harmony of color is not apparent and only a slight idea of the size and perfection of workmanship is conveyed.

WINTER WINDOW-BOXES.

The George Wittbold Co., Chicago, has worked up an excellent business in the filling of winter window-boxes. The now popular boxwood is the principal material used and many thousands have this fall been required to fill their orders. They go about getting the business by sending out a post-card to all the names on their long list of retail customers. The post-card shows an illustration prepared from a photograph. It is a picture of a window in which there is a box filled with boxwood and other evergreens. The text on the card tells of the cheerfulness of winter greens in the window and quotes prices per foot on filling boxes already in place and also on new window-boxes. As a rule they are from $1 to $1.50 per running foot for 8-inch or 10-inch boxes, the price varying, of course, according to the quantity and value of the material used. The boxwood will not survive the winter, in the Chicago climate, but it will carry its rich green foliage until spring and serve all the purposes for which it is required.

EARNINGS OF SPRENGERI.

Would it be possible to earn 50 cents per square foot of bench by growing Asparagus Sprengeri sprays for the wholesale market? C. H.

Having experimented with Asparagus Sprengeri for several years, I concluded that the best way to grow it is in a hanging basket of about sixteen inches diameter. Planted in a very rich compost soil it will last for about two years. While the Sprengeri sprays grown in benches will average somewhat longer, yet they lack that graceful appearance of a basket-grown spray; besides a hanging basket will not take up any extra room. Looking over my records for the last three years I find the average price to be one and one-tenth cents per spray, so you will see that in order to make 50 cents per square foot it would require forty-five salable sprays, or that same amount to the square foot of bench room, which we have found impossible to do. The gross returns on a basket has averaged us 80 cents per year, or $1.60 during the life of the basket.

ALBERT F. AMLING.

BEGONIA REX.

Will you give me full instructions in regard to Rex begonias from the preparation of the soil to put them in when first received from the wholesale florist until in 8-inch pots? What kind of fertilizers are suitable, how used and how often, also general information?

L. A.

This very ornamental foliage section of begonias was once in great demand as hothouse plants, and when first introduced, some fifty years ago, were worth their weight in gold. They were also valued by the commercial florist for many years, more so than today. If you have the right temperature they are as easily grown as a geranium.

They are usually propagated in December, from strong mature leaves of large plants, but not from leaves that are beginning to turn yellow with age. Some lay the whole leaf on the surface of the propagating bed, severing the midribs every inch or two, from which little plants will spring. We think a better way is to cut a leaf into small sections. You can manage to cut each piece of leaf into a wedge-shape, but always let the base of the cutting terminate with a rather stout midrib. Insert these sections of leaves in a trench in the sand as you do other cuttings, about one-third their depth in sand. The sand should be warm. Seventy degrees will do, and the house temperature can run up to 60 degrees.

I may as well say here that Begonia Rex at all times enjoys a high temperature, with plenty of humidity. Although perhaps not necessary, we have often given a batch of these plants in 4-inch pots a daily syringing with the hose, and they grew very fast, for there was heat enough to dry up the moisture on their leaves. If in a cool house, say not over 55 degrees at night, then keep their foliage dry. Shift on as their roots will show you they need it.

For compost, one-half should be a turfy yellow loam and the other half made up of decayed leaves and well rotted cow manure, or the remains of last spring's hotbed and some coarse sand. We have never considered these begonias at all particular about soil. There is no other point in their cultivation that we can think of. Do not expose them to bright sunshine. They are rather a shade-loving plant. We often see grand plants of these at horticultural exhibitions, and large specimens are generally grown in 8-inch to 12-inch pans. Up to an 8-inch pot plant you would not need any fertilizer. A light sprinkling of sheep manure on the surface of the soil would help them if crowded with roots, but don't overdo it, as it is powerful stuff.

TROUBLE WITH CROCKER.

Please inform me as to the trouble with my Ethel Crocker. All the blooms look like those which I send you. They do not break good, and when they do break they are about half size. I have looked for thrips, but do not find any. The soil seems to agree with all the rest of the stock. The plants look fine.

W. F. Y.

The blooms you sent were badly shriveled and I could not form any idea of what might be wrong with them. The bud was in good condition, but failed to disclose any trouble. Since your trouble is with E. Crocker, I will mention some of its peculiarities, and perhaps you will be able to get your information from them. Crocker is a warm-weather variety. It will produce fine blooms in the fall and again a heavy crop of grand blooms in the spring, unless it is handled especially with a winter crop in view. When handled the same as other varieties it is inclined to rest during midwinter. In a cool temperature it will burst a large percentage of its blooms during the short days and many blooms will come streaked and off color. To grow Crocker well, you must give it 54 to 56 degrees at night and don't feed it too liberally during the winter. We grew it successfully for a few years, but have discarded it on account of its peculiarities.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

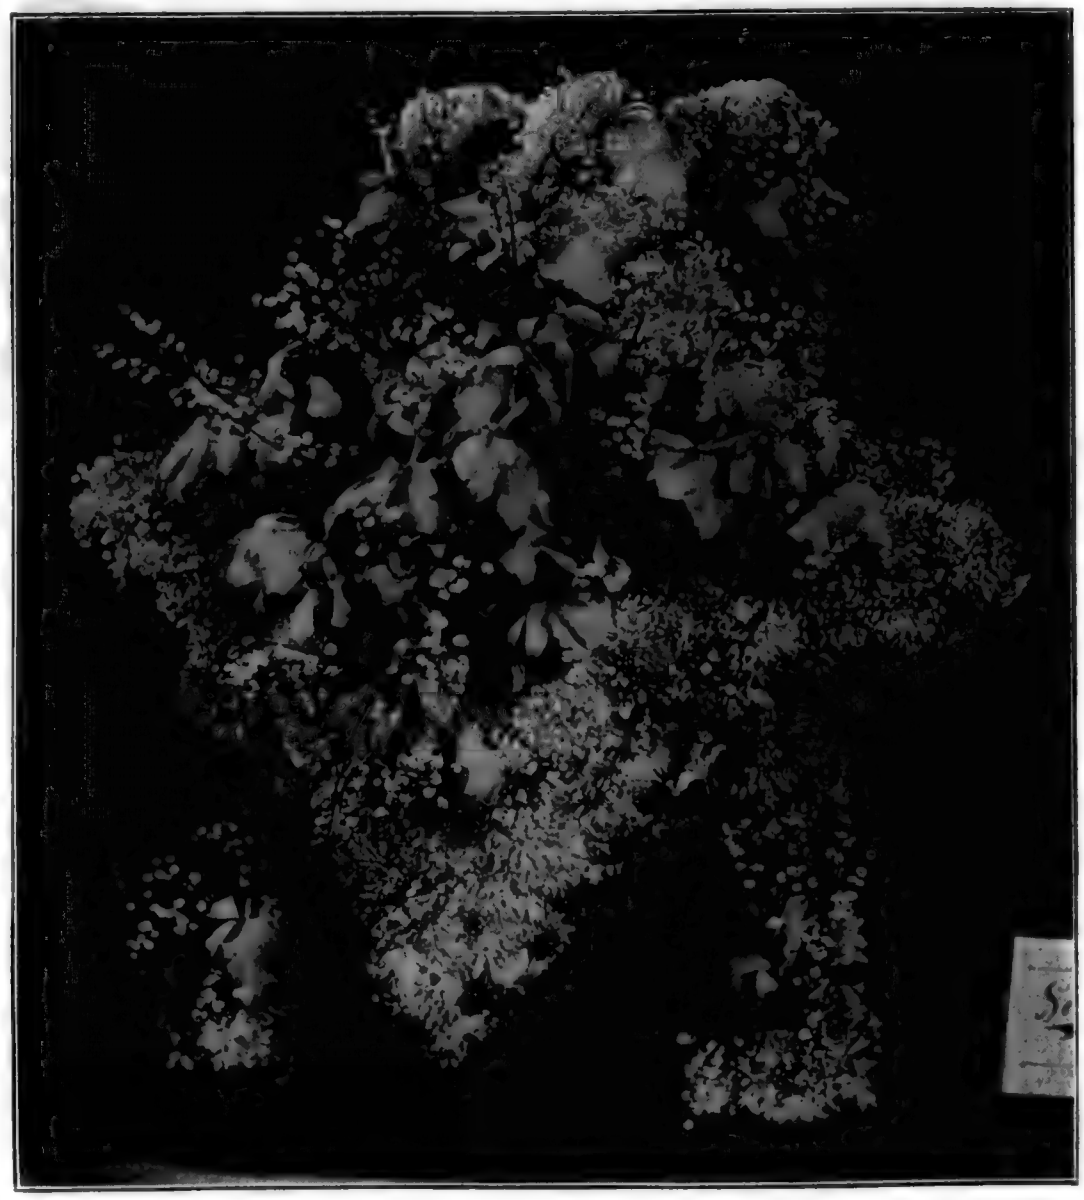
Propagation.

Having decided to begin propagating your carnations and having overhauled and whitewashed the bench, filling in the sand is the next step. It is a good idea to screen all propagating sand before putting it in the bench. This is to make sure there is no trash of any kind or lumps of clay in it. The whitewash should be thoroughly dried before any sand is put on. Fill in to a depth of about three inches or a little over before it is packed down. When packed down it should be two and one-half inches deep. To pack it down some use a common brick, which we consider clumsy. To make a good packer take a piece of planed plank 2x6x12 for the body and to make a handle take a piece of 2x4 eight inches long. Cut out a V-shaped piece from the middle of one side and cut off the corners from the opposite side. Then nail onto the body and you have a handle that you can hold tightly without cramping your hand.

The lines for inserting the cuttings are made with a common tableknife, and if you like you can use a stick to guide it straight. With a little practice you will be able to draw straight lines without the stick, but be sure you get your rows straight. It may save you much trouble some time. Anyway it is a good idea to form the habit of being neat and orderly about everything you do. It's a good habit.

When inserting the cuttings always begin at the back of the bench and work towards you, and when one row is full draw another line to the right of it and one and one-half to two inches away, and begin inserting from the back again.

When you have inserted the last cutting then insert the label directly in front of it as though it were a cutting. On this label should be written plainly the name of the variety in full and the date they were inserted. Do not trust to memory, as you are likely to forget by the time they are ready to come out, and you may not take them out yourself, anyway. Any of your men should be able to make out the identity of any variety without trouble. The date will help you to keep track of them better. If you know when a cutting was put in the sand, you will know about when it should be rooted.



When finished sticking a batch of cuttings they should be watered enough to wet the sand thoroughly, which will cause the sand to settle firmly around the cuttings. The cutting should be inserted in the sand about three-quarters of an inch deep, according to the size of the cutting. Perhaps it would be better to say it should be set deep enough so that it will stand upright when being watered. Of course they are inserted in an upright position to start with.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

The first arrivals of Japan lilies in Europe are somewhat disappointing to the importer. A larger percentage than usual are unpacking rotten and fifty per cent of a recent consignment unpacked in Hamburg proved to be useless. As is usual with the first consignments the bulbs were not fully ripe when lifted in Japan, with the result that many have shrunk considerably in transit, and consequently on arrival are found to be much below specified measurements. It is becoming the practice in England for many growers to particularly stipulate when placing their orders, that their deliveries shall be taken from the second shipment, for by this means only can they be certain of the bulbs being ripe and well matured.

Gladiolus Colvillei alba The Bride imported from Holland is causing some trouble in England this year. It is well known that if this bulb is packed in too close a case for export, it will be found on arrival to be heated, mildewed and probably rotten. In spite of this fact some firms still persist in packing bulk quantities loose in close cases, and I recently came across a consignment of really magnificent bulbs that were totally spoiled. Instead of being packed in paper bags and then in open cases, which is the only way this bulb will stand transit, they were loosely packed in close cases and chaff run in between the bulbs, with the disastrous results stated above. In ordering this bulb many growers are now stipulating on their orders just the manner in which they want them packed. Since the price has been up cultivations in Holland have been heavily manured to hasten the growth. Too heavy manuring is probably more disastrous with this article than any other bulb.

Exhibition Design by J. S. Simmons, Toronto.

Table Decoration of Orchids and Valley by J. S. Simmons, Toronto.

Probably never before in the history of the flower trade have chrysanthemums been so plentiful. Covent Garden is glutted and loads are being thrown away daily. This is largely the result of mild weather, there having occurred up to date no frost worth mentioning to cut off any outdoor bloom.

In new plants we are getting plenty of American varieties of carnations, four new varieties being shown at the Royal Horticultural Society's meeting October 23. The most notable was a variety called White Perfection. This is likely to become a standard market variety, as the blooms are large, of fine form, and borne on long, stiff stems. It was generally admired and commented upon by the trade and was shown by Hugh Low & Co., Enfield, near London. At the same meeting a valuable new fern came from G. Prickett, of South Tottenham, named Nephrolepis tesselata. It is quite distinct from the older varieties of nephrolepis, the fronds being more expanded and longer at the tips and having a distinctly wavy appearance.

J. B.

FRED BREITMEYER, "ANGEL."

In theatrical slang the man who backs with his money any sort of a theatrical venture is styled an "angel." Fred Breitmeyer is such a one. It is not stated if the following clipping from a Toledo paper is some of his own press agent's stuff. Barring a few extra stories on the Breitmeyer building and a few other little details like that, including the total elimination of the other members of the firm, it goes fairly well:

"Fred Breitmeyer, the millionaire florist of Detroit, arrived in this city yesterday to be the guest of Frank Burt during the stay of 'The Governor's Pardon' at Burt's the last half of the week. Mr. Breitmeyer is an auto enthusiast and bought the show as a sort of a hobby because it contains a most realistic auto racing scene, in which two real cars are utilized, and it gave Mr. Breitmeyer opportunity to use several cars which contain his own ideas in construction. He owns the largest greenhouses in the middle west at Mount Clemens, and the twelve-story Breitmeyer block in Detroit is one of the finest buildings there. He utilizes that for his retail and wholesale florists' business, and only took a flyer in the show business as a sort of recreation.

"He came to Toledo to see his old friend, Mr. Burt, and also to look over the show, as he has not seen it for quite a while. He thinks so well of the show business that he may soon send out other productions, finding the mingling of flowers and amusement offerings go right well together."

HEAT FOR MIXED STOCK.

Will you please tell me what the night temperature should be in a house where a variety of plants are grown, such as azaleas, hydrangeas, palms, ferns, Harrisii lilies, geraniums, Baby Ramblers, spiræas, smilax, callas, forcing bulbs, etc.?

E. H. O.

It is not possible to grow all these plants in one temperature and have the best of success, but if they must all be under the same roof, 50 degrees night temperature will suit the majority better than a higher or lower reading, until such time as the business warrants other houses. For the details of the requirements of each plant see the Florists' Manual, by William Scott.

MIGNONETTE.

We would like to have W. S. tell us if it will be too warm if we run our mignonette house at 60 to 65 degrees, with a little air on in the daytime? We have it planted with Allen's Defiance, and the plants are about ten to fourteen inches high. Some show bud, but we think they will have short stems, and if 65 degrees would make the stem run up more would it make the flower smaller?

A. B. C.

You are keeping your mignonette much too high. Allen's Defiance is a fine variety if you can get it true, but no mignonette should be kept in dark weather over 40 to 45 degrees at night. Keep lateral growths rubbed off if you expect fine, strong spikes, and never let the night temperature go over 45 degrees. Give ventilation on all possible occasions. It is the absurdly high temperature that makes your flowers small.

W. S.

COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

[A synopsis of a paper by Herman Knope, read before the Detroit Florists' Club, November 21, 1906.]

The chrysanthemum is the most decorative flower we have, and if nature had been good enough to provide it with the fragrance of the American Beauty, then nothing could surpass it. I think we owe the originators many thanks for the good varieties we have today, especially those we grow for commercial use.

We should, in my estimation, grow the varieties that sell best and the trade demands. If any grower is growing mums for the wholesale market and is not acquainted with the varieties that the trade demands, it will be to his advantage, financially, to have the store man or commission house keep him posted on such varieties as the flower buying public demands. It is a wise plan to grow such varieties as are admired by the public at the exhibitions held in the larger stores. In order to make these exhibitions interesting and profitable new and fancy varieties should also be shown, so the people can compare the colors, size, shape, etc.

The grower should know the market value of his stock. There is usually a glut on the market at the middle of November, but this should not bring down the price. Too many poor flowers are on the market.

Many growers cut their blooms before they are well open. They seem to be too anxious to get them on the market. Leave the blooms to develop; they will keep better, sell more readily and command a better price.

To grow good mums requires more study, time and labor than some give it. Most growers grow too large a variety; a few kinds well grown will bring much better returns.

The Best Sorts.

Below is a list of good commercial varieties to choose from, all good growers and shippers:

White—George S. Kalb, Polly Rose, Ivory, Adelia, Arline, White Bonnaffon, Majestic, Jerome Jones and Chadwick.

Pink—Pacific, Marie Liger, Maud Dean, A. J. Balfour, Wm. Duckham and Dr. Enguehard.

Yellow—Halliday, H. Hurrell, Major Bonnaffon, Georgiana Pitcher, Yellow Jones, Nagoya and Golden Chadwick.

White Ivory is, in my estimation, the best all-round white mum we have. It requires less room to grow and, being a good seller, will net more money to the grower than any other.

Preparing to Propagate.

After you have decided what to grow for next season, get some good, vigorous stock and plant in a suitable place in order to secure healthy cuttings, for here is where the growing of good chrysanthemums begins. I prefer planting stock plants in a bench. By this method I believe we can secure more and better cuttings. Another good plan, if you have the facilities, is to plant the stock out in frames, but be sure and protect from frost.

There are many ways of propagating chrysanthemums with good results. I have had fairly good success outdoors in hotbeds, but if one has a side bench in a well-ventilated house, I would prefer it instead of a frame. Use good, clean, sharp sand packed well before inserting cuttings. Give plenty of water and protect against the sun, and you will have no trouble striking roots.

Time to Propagate.

The time to begin propagating depends on the variety. The earliest varieties should be propagated early in April and be ready to plant the latter part of May in order to procure good blooms. The midseason ones we propagate the first part of May and the very late varieties can be planted the middle of July and, if well taken care of, will produce good blooms.

Chrysanthemums that are to produce exhibition blooms, good stem and foliage, should all be propagated in March or the first week in April and the very best wood taken for cuttings. Plant in May.

The space to plant mums will depend on the variety. We all know from experience that more space must be allowed for varieties that have large foliage.

If single stems are to be grown, such varieties as Ivory, plant 4x5 inches. I prefer single-stemmed plants. This requires more plants, but it gives each plant the same advantage and will make better foliage and blooms.

Soil for Mums.

My experience is that the soil should be good, stiff soil, not hardpan clay, but good sod put up with cow manure in the fall and turned over in the spring.

If solid benches are used, see that they are provided with good drainage. Cinders or broken bricks are good.

I have found that four to five inches of soil is a good depth, as we can control the watering and feeding better than with more soil. Before filling the benches, cover the bottom with air-slaked lime to prevent angleworms from working.

When ready to plant mark the space off carefully, using some kind of a marker. You will not regret this when it comes to tying up and working between the plants. Plant a bench or house as near uniformly as circumstances will permit, and use only good, healthy stock.

Plant firmly, leaving a little basin around each plant to hold water. After a bench is planted, water each plant individually, two or three times, if the soil is dry. This will give each plant the same amount of water and they will make a uniform start and growth.

C. C. Pollworth Takes to the Woods.

After ten days or two weeks, if the soil is loose pound it with a piece of brick. If the soil should happen to bake, give it a half or one inch of top-dressing with equal parts of well-rotted cow manure and soil. Working the soil is detrimental to the feeding roots of the plants.

Tying and Feeding.

Do not wait with the tying up until the plants fall over. A good scheme, especially with single-stemmed stock, is to run wires overhead above the rows. Then take string and tie to the base of the plant, carrying the string up to the wire. This is all the tying necessary. Every two or three weeks give the stalk a turn around the string.

The next thing will be to watch the side shoots and suckers. Keep them carefully removed if good blooms are expected. When disbudding time comes one cannot be too careful in doing this work. We should not take buds when they are too small. If we do, we will injure the bud that should produce the bloom. On the other hand, we should not wait until the buds are too large.

If the soil was in good condition at the time of planting, not so much feeding is necessary, but if it was poor, feed liberally. Do not feed until the buds show up; then sparingly in the beginning, stopping when the flowers show color. Feed pink varieties the least, as too much will take out the color. Yellow will stand more and white can stand the most.

In regard to fertilizer, I have had best success using pulverized sheep manure soaked in water and used as a liquid. It helps make a good bloom, stem and foliage.

Insects and Disease.

Insects must be destroyed as soon as detected; do not wait until your plants are covered. We all know that the black fly or aphis is the most bothersome insect we have to fight on mums. This can easily be gotten rid of by spraying with nicotine extract diluted in water. Three teaspoonfuls to one gallon of water will do the work without fail. For greenfly use two teaspoonfuls to one gallon of water, and four teaspoonfuls to one gallon of water for red spider.

I will say that red spider can be kept down by using a good pressure from the hose. Mums will bear syringing every sunny day during the summer months, but the man at the hose should be careful to get as little water on the soil as possible. After October 1 syringing should cease unless one has been unfortunate enough not to be rid of red spider.

I speak of not syringing later than October 1 for the reason that here is where much trouble is experienced with rust and blackspot. My experience teaches me not to let mums stand with the foliage wet at night. If we would observe this point I know that we would have no cause to regret it.

We often notice mum foliage covered with mildew. This not only is injurious to the plants but also decreases the value of the blooms and most times we are compelled to carry them out to the rubbish heap. Mildew is caused from draught, sudden change in the temperature, etc. This can be checked by mixing sulphur and linseed oil. Make it as thick as paint and apply to the steam pipes. It would not be a bad plan to do this the very first time you get up steam in the fall. It helps purify the air in our houses and will destroy mildew if any is in sight.

CHRYSANTHEMUM DAKOMA.

Elmer D. Smith declines to abide by the verdict of the C. S. A. committee and in the matter of Chrysanthemum Dakoma appeals to the court of last resort, the public. It will be sent out without C. S. A. approval. Chrysanthemum Dakoma was exhibited before the Chrysanthemum Society's Cincinnati committee November 10 as No. 55-4-05. The committee consists of R. Witterstaetter, James Allan and Wm. Jackson, but, highly as they think of the author of the "Chrysanthemum Manual" and much as they respect his judgment of a chrysanthemum, the best they could do for Dakoma was to score it eighty points on the exhibition scale. It was a jolt to the manager of the Adrian seedling factory, for he thinks highly of Dakoma, and, without explanation as to damage in transit or other reason for the poor showing at Cincinnati, announces that Dakoma will be sent out "on its merits." It is a bronze and, aside from color, its principal characteristics of flower are shown in the accompanying illustration prepared from a photograph made by Mr. Smith himself. He says it is a good thing either for exhibition or commercial purposes.

POLLWORTH IN THE WOODS.

C. C. Pollworth, of Milwaukee, has returned home after spending a couple of weeks in the woods in northern Wisconsin looking after some lumber interests and also taking in the bouquet green districts. He reports that on account of the heavy snow and cold weather throughout the northern part of the state very little green was picked after October 10, and this commodity will be extremely scarce this Christmas. He also spent several days in the woods hunting deer and was successful in getting a fine specimen of the king of the forest, as the accompanying illustration, prepared from a snap shot photograph, will show.

TOBACCO AS A FERTILIZER.

We are in a position to procure a big lot of tobacco stems, and ask you to state if they are as valuable a fertilizer as is stable manure. S. B.

There is no doubt you can use the stems as you would stable manure. I know nothing about what fertilizing matter they contain. I never have seen a chemical analysis of the stems or leaves, but we have often plowed them into the ground and observed nothing but good results. A friend of ours, an excellent amateur gardener and farmer, whose business in the city was that of a leaf tobacco jobber, used to cart tons of stems and broken up leaves to his little farm, mix them with the litter from the stable and plow them into the soil, and over them I have seen excellent crops of potatoes, cabbage and corn. He also spread two or three inches of the fresh stems on the surface in his dwarf pear orchard, and he grew fine pears. What should we do without tobacco? All the moralizing and lectures in the world will never abolish its use. It is good everywhere except in the abominable cigarettes. W. S.

SWEET PEAS FOR CUTTING.

What would be the best kind of sweet peas to grow for the New York market? Do you think it is too late to start them now? We have one house we would like to plant in peas, side benches about three feet from the glass, middle benches six feet. W. B.

Sweet peas sown now, if in a light, sunny house, should be in flower in early April, when they are in good demand. Some of the old standard varieties will flower by the middle of April. Of these there are many splendid sorts. A half dozen distinct and desirable kinds are Emily Henderson, white; Blanche Ferry, white and pink; Countess of Radnor, lavender; Katherine Tracy, light pink, extra fine; Prima Donna, rose pink; Coccinea, bright scarlet. These are also fine for sowing outdoors in early spring. They are not, however, any good for sowing in the greenhouse in the fall for winter flowering. If you are anxious to pick peas by Easter, then the only varieties to sow are the varieties raised by A. C. Zvolanek. His Christmas Pink is well named, of the Blanche Ferry type, with fine long stems. Florence Denzer is pure white.

The side benches, with only three feet of headroom, will not do for sweet peas. If you cannot use the space for young stock or bedding plants, then try candytuft. Sun, fresh air and lots of water at the roots are the great requisites for producing good sweet peas. W. S.

MARKETING AT WHOLESALE.

[The paper by Charles Ingram awarded second prize in the contest for the prizes offered by W. F. Kasting.]

The methods of disposing to the retailer by growers have passed through almost as many stages of evolution within the last twenty years as have the construction of greenhouses, varieties grown, size of structures, etc. The methods that were fully competent to take care of the market end of the growers' cares up to a short time ago would now prove totally inadequate to handle the ever-increasing supply, "and the end is not yet."

An Individual Problem.

To my way of thinking, there is no one method at present in vogue that would apply equally to all growers, for the simple reason that all growers are not equally favorably situated as regards location of plant. To be more explicit, the grower that is in close proximity to a large center of distribution can handle a rush order with greater facility than one at some distance from said center, where shipping facilities may be limited to a certain number of expresses a day. Where the former can bring into use anything from a horse and wagon to an auto, the latter is handicapped by distance, etc., although undoubtedly he is better off as regards taxation and several other important items. There are other vast differences between growers that will be referred to later on.

The largest growers, who produce stock enough to enable them to run a shipping department of their own on practically the same lines as a wholesale commission house, have, it would seem, almost reached the climax of perfection; but to many growers this method of disposing of their goods would be totally impractical, so we may safely eliminate the former from the subject and con-

larger stores. In order to make these exhibitions interesting and profitable new and fancy varieties should also be shown, so the people can compare the colors, size, shape, etc.

The grower should know the market value of his stock. There is usually a glut on the market at the middle of November, but this should not bring down the price. Too many poor flowers are on the market.

Many growers cut their blooms before they are well open. They seem to be too anxious to get them on the market. Leave the blooms to develop; they will keep better, sell more readily and command a better price.

To grow good mums requires more study, time and labor than some give it. Most growers grow too large a variety; a few kinds well grown will bring much better returns.

The Best Sorts.

Below is a list of good commercial varieties to choose from, all good growers and shippers:

White—George S. Kalb, Polly Rose, Ivory, Adelia, Arline, White Bonnaffon, Majestic, Jerome Jones and Chadwick.

Pink—Pacific, Marie Liger, Maud Dean, A. J. Balfour, Wm. Duckham and Dr. Enguehard.

Yellow—Halliday, H. Hurrell, Major Bonnaffon, Georgiana Pitcher, Yellow Jones, Nagoya and Golden Chadwick.

White Ivory is, in my estimation, the best all-round white mum we have. It requires less room to grow and, being a good seller, will net more money to the grower than any other.

Preparing to Propagate.

After you have decided what to grow for next season, get some good, vigorous stock and plant in a suitable place in order to secure healthy cuttings, for here is where the growing of good chrysanthemums begins. I prefer planting stock plants in a bench. By this method I believe we can secure more and better cuttings. Another good plan, if you have the facilities, is to plant the stock out in frames, but be sure and protect from frost.

There are many ways of propagating chrysanthemums with good results. I have had fairly good success outdoors in hotbeds, but if one has a side bench in a well-ventilated house, I would prefer it instead of a frame. Use good, clean, sharp sand packed well before inserting cuttings. Give plenty of water and protect against the sun, and you will have no trouble striking roots.

Time to Propagate.

The time to begin propagating depends on the variety. The earliest varieties should be propagated early in April and be ready to plant the latter part of May in order to procure good blooms. The midseason ones we propagate the first part of May and the very late varieties can be planted the middle of July and, if well taken care of, will produce good blooms.

Chrysanthemums that are to produce exhibition blooms, good stem and foliage, should all be propagated in March or the first week in April and the very best wood taken for cuttings. Plant in May.

The space to plant mums will depend on the variety. We all know from experience that more space must be allowed for varieties that have large foliage.

If single stems are to be grown, such varieties as Ivory, plant 4x5 inches. I prefer single-stemmed plants. This requires more plants, but it gives each plant the same advantage and will make better foliage and blooms.

Soil for Mums.

My experience is that the soil should be good, stiff soil, not hardpan clay, but good sod put up with cow manure in the fall and turned over in the spring.

If solid benches are used, see that they are provided with good drainage. Cinders or broken bricks are good.

I have found that four to five inches of soil is a good depth, as we can control the watering and feeding better than with more soil. Before filling the benches, cover the bottom with air-slaked lime to prevent angleworms from working.

When ready to plant mark the space off carefully, using some kind of a marker. You will not regret this when it comes to tying up and working between the plants. Plant a bench or house as near uniformly as circumstances will permit, and use only good, healthy stock.

Plant firmly, leaving a little basin around each plant to hold water. After a bench is planted, water each plant individually, two or three times, if the soil is dry. This will give each plant the same amount of water and they will make a uniform start and growth.

After ten days or two weeks, if the soil is loose pound it with a piece of brick. If the soil should happen to bake, give it a half or one inch of top-dressing with equal parts of well-rotted cow manure and soil. Working the soil is detrimental to the feeding roots of the plants.

Tying and Feeding.

Do not wait with the tying up until the plants fall over. A good scheme, especially with single-stemmed stock, is to run wires overhead above the rows. Then take string and tie to the base of the plant, carrying the string up to the wire. This is all the tying necessary. Every two or three weeks give the stalk a turn around the string.

The next thing will be to watch the side shoots and suckers. Keep them carefully removed if good blooms are expected. When disbudding time comes one cannot be too careful in doing this work. The methods of disposing to the retailer by growers have passed through almost as many stages of evolution within the last twenty years as have the construction of greenhouses, varieties grown, size of structures, etc. The methods that were fully competent to take care of the market end of the growers' cares up to a short time ago would now prove totally inadequate to handle the ever-increasing supply, "and the end is not yet."

There are other vast differences between growers that will be referred to later on.

The largest growers, who produce stock enough to enable them to run a shipping department of their own on practically the same lines as a wholesale commission house, have, it would seem, almost reached the climax of perfection; but to many growers this method of disposing of their goods would be totally impractical, so we may safely eliminate the former from the subject and con fine our remarks to the case of those growers whose conditions and surroundings do not justify this mode of procedure.

To answer the question at issue according to our views on the subject, a further classification is necessary, and to simplify the matter will divide them thus:

Class A.—Growers who are close to a city, or cities.

Class B.—Growers too far out and who are only able to ship say twice a day.

Class C.—Specialists.

In those cities where a combination of growers have formed a flower market it will invariably be found the best medium for the larger growers to dispose of their goods, but we have always thought that the smaller grower would do far better by consigning to a reputable commission house; but, again, there are cities where there is neither market nor a commission house. To growers thus situated we would advise them to get into line as soon as possible.

The Commission House.

Before going any further, a few words of explanation as to recommending the smaller growers to patronize the commission house in preference to the market. Many men are good growers, but indifferent salesmen. The commission man will do it more satisfactorily than most men you could hire to do it for you, with infinite less worry to yourself, and invariably succeed in getting better returns, if all items are faithfully figured in. Several other reasons might be given in favor of the commission house, but simply stating the fact that in my opinion that is the best method for the smaller grower to follow is all that is necessary here.

Class B.

Where growers are restricted as to shipping accommodation, and many both large and small are so situated, we would again name the commission house as the best medium for disposing of the stock.

Blame for Misunderstandings.

Many growers in years past have consigned goods to commission men at times when they had no other outlet, and because the returns were not satisfactory have held a strong prejudice against them on that account, but it must be remembered that the methods now practiced by these gentlemen have advanced the same as all other lines of horticulture, until today their system is perfected to such an extent that it would seem almost impossible to improve on it. In fact, in most cases where misunderstandings occur it is more often the fault of the grower than the consignee. We allude to such instances as where the grower at holiday times disposes of quantities of his goods to retailers. Some may think this mode of procedure all right; but look at both sides of the question. Any commission man, at all up in his business, knows pretty nearly the amount of stock to expect from his growers, and figures the effect that inclement weather and other adverse conditions will have on the development of the stock, and makes his calculations accordingly. Is it right, I ask, when after expending considerable cash for advertising, and otherwise obtaining orders for goods he honestly expects to handle, to be not only disappointed himself but have to disappoint others depending on him, possibly having the effect of losing their patronage and thereby indirectly damaging the grower himself? Again, although it must be admitted the practice is not nowadays nearly so prevalent as a few years ago, think of the pernicious habit of holding up large quantities of stock and landing it on the commission man too late for him to handle to advantage, and quite often in such condition as to be absolutely worthless, and which no reputable dealer would ship or retailer receive. I crave pardon for inserting a quotation from Kipling's "Mandelay," but the lines always suggest themselves to me when I run across a consignment in such condition.

Ship me somewhere's east of Suez,
Where the best is like the worst,
Where there ain't no Ten Commandments,
And a man can raise a thirst.

Pack Well.

Another vitally important detail is packing the stock so that it receives the least possible damage in transit. It must always be borne in mind that quite a percentage of these goods have to be reshipped. Right here we would offer a suggestion, which we feel sure is bound to be generally adopted in the near future, viz: to have light receptacles capable of holding, twenty-five, fifty and 100 of such flowers as could be handled in that manner, such as violets, carnations, certain roses (of course it would be impractical in the case of extra Beauties, etc.), most bulb stock, and several other subjects. This method of displaying the goods has been followed in Covent Garden, London, for years, and I have often wondered why it had not been adopted here. I feel sure, however, that American ingenuity will contrive receptacles that will fill the bill. These remarks about shipping would be incomplete if I fail to mention two other important items, viz: cleanliness of all paper, etc., used, and grading. We are all aware how liable one is, if he be a few short of an even number of firsts, to put in the required number of good seconds; but it should also be borne in mind that the prospective buyer will almost always spot those very ones, frequently with the effect of declining the deal, or else standing out for a reduction in price.

Specialists.

The specialist is in a distinct class by himself, not alone as regards the goods he handles, but in the enviable position he enjoys in regard to the disposal of the same. Specialists as a rule are so well known, not only in their neighborhood, but further afield, that the judicious use of the advertising columns of the trade papers in their case is all that is necessary. These remarks only apply to the "bona fides," as many call themselves in this class that have no earthly reason for so doing. I once heard a witty son of the Green Isle, in answer to the question of, "What is a specialist?" reply, "A man that thinks he is one, blows his own trumpet, but the rale thing, why, other people blow it for him."

The majority of the foregoing remarks have dealt principally with the cut flower trade. In regard to the plant business, few cities are large enough to warrant a plant market, and it seems to me that the methods at present in vogue with the gentlemen engaged in this line are as practical as any that can be recommended, but I cannot miss this opportunity of paying tribute to the vast improvement of the last few years in regard to the methods of packing plants. When one looks back a few years, and remembers the condition in which one received a shipment of plants, he cannot fail to highly appreciate the great improvements that have taken place. The only people who have lost by these improvements are the express companies.

In conclusion I would state that in this paper I did not start out with any idea of evolving a new mode of procedure, but have tried to offer a few suggestions that might improve existing conditions, which seem to answer their purpose satisfactorily.

UTILIZING A SASH HOUSE.

Will you kindly inform me if I can root carnation cutting in a small sash house, adjoining a large greenhouse? There is no heat in the sash house excepting what comes through from the house adjoining, there being no partition between the two. J. B.

While the house you describe does not give ideal conditions for propagating, yet I would not say that you could not root your carnation cuttings in it. You will find that during extreme cold weather you will have trouble in keeping frost out, or at least you will have a very low temperature. So that instead of rooting your cuttings in six weeks, it may take them eight to ten weeks, and not as high a percentage will root. It will pay you to run at least one pipe under the bench, and run it near the outside wall, regardless of what you intend to grow in the house. A. F. J. B.

Allentown, Pa.—A greenhouse 18x41 feet is being erected by the Lord & Burnham Co., of New York, on the grounds of E. M. Young. A ten-foot addition to be used as a workshop will also be erected.

Hampton, Ia.—The Curtis Floral Co. has completed a new range, 48x75, near its old greenhouses, of the A. Dietch Co.'s patent short-roof construction. This is to be used exclusively for carnations and roses. In addition a new fern room, 20x32, has been built during the last year. The firm has nearly doubled its output in this time.

ROOTING GERANIUMS.

Will you please tell me the best way of rooting geranium cuttings? My old method has failed the last couple of years. X. Y. Z.

We employ only two methods of rooting these common but popular plants. From September 1 till February 1 we try to select cuttings of a firm growth, cutting just below a joint. In many soft-wooded plants this cutting just below a joint may be of little consequence, but with the succulent geranium we think it important, and, as it takes no longer, it is well to observe it. The above applies to all the flowering zonal varieties, of which we may select Mrs. E. G. Hill, Nutt and Alphonse Ricard as types. Scented-leaved and variegated varieties I prefer to put in the sand, and if you choose you can propagate all your geraniums in the sand, only it is a waste of time and space and they do not make as good plants as those rooted in small pots.

Briefly, our method is, cut the shoot at a joint, leaving only one fully developed leaf and one not fully developed. Pot firmly, making sure the soil is firm and compact at the base of the cutting. Give them one thorough watering. Set them on a bench in a house where the night temperature is 50 degrees, and do not water again until they are decidedly dry. At least ninety per cent should be rooted in a month. In the warm sand of a propagating bed in the winter months you should not lose one per cent.

RHODODENDRONS.

Please tell me if rhododendrons intended for next Easter should be treated the same as azaleas. X. Y. Z.

Rhododendrons, although belonging to the same family, want a different treatment from the Indian azaleas, which are those we grow for Easter. The rhododendron is a hardy shrub in our northern states, where the soil suits it. The azalea will endure a temperature almost to the freezing point, but still is a tender plant. It is necessary to keep many varieties of azaleas in a low temperature during the winter months or they would be in flower before there is a demand for them. The proper place for rhododendrons would be a deep coldframe where severe frost could be excluded (a few degrees would not hurt) and the first part of February bring them into a night temperature of 55 degrees and give them a daily syringing. If you can't do this, then keep them in the coldest house you have. W. S.

OBITUARY.

Claude Harglerode.

The lifeless body of Claude Harglerode, 13 years old, son of U. G. Harglerode, the well-known florist of Shippensburg, Pa., was found beside the tracks of the C. V. R. R. a short distance east of town on the evening of November 21. Nothing could be learned as to how the accident happened, though he evidently had been struck by a train. Claude was a bright boy and his parents have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Victor Henry.

Victor Henry, a well-known gardener at Rochester, N. Y., died November 20 of old age. He was a French-Canadian and his early years were spent in the province of Quebec. A number of years ago he came to Rochester, where he won quite a reputation as a landscape gardener. For the last four or five years he had done considerable work at St. Columba cemetery and rectory. Last summer his aged wife died and from that time on he had lived alone, failing rapidly. He was about 70 years old.

C. F. Imoberstag.

C. F. Imoberstag was born in Bern, Switzerland, September 23, 1848. He attended school until his sixteenth year, when his father, who was a teacher in a high school, sent him to France to learn the nursery business. When 21 years of age he came to America and settled in Toledo, O. In 1882 he bought four acres on Western avenue where he built greenhouses. Hard work and persistent application to business brought him success. He enjoyed the best of health until May 7, 1905, when he was stricken with paralysis. He regained his health and attended to business until September 26. He leaves four sons: Albert, of the Forest cemetery greenhouse, Dr. Carl Otto, Walter and Arthur. The last two named are conducting the business with their mother; and three sisters, Mrs. Julia Kruger, Estella and Alice. The firm will continue under the name of Mrs. C. F. Imoberstag & Sons.

Edson M. Crossman.

Edson M. Crossman, a well-known horticulturist, died at his home five miles south of Batavia, N. Y., November 19, at the age of 72 years. For many years Mr. Crossman was a director of the Genesee County Agricultural Society. He originated a large number of improved varieties of vegetables and fruits. One brother, L. H. Crossman, of Buffalo, and a sister, Mrs. C. Huggins, of Batavia, survive.

Frank E. Hodgman.

Frank E. Hodgman, for more than thirty years one of the leading florists of Louisville, Ky., died November 19 at his residence, 1912 West Walnut street, of a complication of diseases. Mr. Hodgman was 70 years of age and had been a resident of Louisville for thirty-two years. He was a native of New Hampshire, but moved to Louisville to engage in the greenhouse business. He established a place at 1914 West Walnut street and conducted it at his death. Mr. Hodgman is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Hodgman, and a step-son, John Besler, of Bullitt county. He has no other immediate relatives and his other connections are residents of New England.

BEAVER, PA.—David D. Howell, formerly superintendent of Windyghoul, Beaver, Pa., has been appointed general superintendent of Laurelton Hall, Long Island, the estate of Louis C. Tiffany.

IONIA, MICH.—A new greenhouse plant has been built in this city, consisting of four houses 28x100 feet and costing $6,000. They are steam heated. D. L. Vincent, the owner, has them stocked for a general retail trade and the place is open for business.

fine our remarks to the case of those growers whose conditions and surroundings do not justify this mode of procedure.

To answer the question at issue according to our views on the subject, a further classification is necessary, and to simplify the matter will divide them thus:

Class A.—Growers who are close to a city, or cities.

Class B.—Growers too far out and who are only able to ship say twice a day.

Class C.—Specialists.

In those cities where a combination of growers have formed a flower market it will invariably be found the best medium for the larger growers to dispose of their goods, but we have always thought that the smaller grower would do far better by consigning to a reputable commission house; but, again, there are cities where there is neither market nor a commission house. To growers thus situated we would advise them to get into line as soon as possible.

The Commission House.

Before going any further, a few words of explanation as to recommending the smaller growers to patronize the commission house in preference to the market. Many men are good growers, but indifferent salesmen. The commission man will do it more satisfactorily than most men you could hire to do it for you, with infinite less worry to yourself, and invariably succeed in getting better returns, if all items are faithfully figured in. Several other reasons might be given in favor of the commission house, but simply stating the fact that in my opinion that is the best method for the smaller grower to follow is all that is necessary here.

Class B.

Where growers are restricted as to shipping accommodation, and many both large and small are so situated, we would again name the commission house as the best medium for disposing of the stock.

Blame for Misunderstandings.

Many growers in years past have consigned goods to commission men at times when they had no other outlet, and because the returns were not satisfactory have held a strong prejudice against them on that account, but it must be remembered that the methods now practiced by these gentlemen have advanced the same as all other lines of horticulture, until today their system is perfected to such an extent that it would seem almost impossible to improve on it. In fact, in most cases where misunderstandings occur it is more often the fault of the grower than the consignee. We allude to such instances as where the grower at holiday times disposes of quantities of his goods to retailers. Some may think this mode of procedure all right; but look at both sides of the question. Any commission man, at all up in his business, knows pretty nearly the amount of stock to expect from his growers, and figures the effect that inclement weather and other adverse conditions will have on the development of the stock, and makes his calculations accordingly. Is it right, I ask, when after expending considerable cash for advertising, and otherwise obtaining orders for goods he honestly expects to handle, to be not only disappointed himself but have to disappoint others depending on him, possibly having the effect of losing their patronage and thereby indirectly damaging the grower himself? Again, although it must be admitted the practice is not nowadays nearly so prevalent as a few years ago, think of the pernicious habit of holding up large quantities of stock and landing it on the commission man too late for him to handle to advantage, and quite often in such condition as to be absolutely worthless, and which no reputable dealer would ship or retailer receive. I crave pardon for inserting a quotation from Kipling's "Mandelay," but the lines always suggest themselves to me when I run across a consignment in such condition.

Ship me somewhere's east of Suez,
Where the best is like the worst,
Where there ain't no Ten Commandments,
And a man can raise a thirst.

Pack Well.

Another vitally important detail is packing the stock so that it receives the least possible damage in transit. It must always be borne in mind that quite a percentage of these goods have to be reshipped. Right here we would offer a suggestion, which we feel sure is bound to be generally adopted in the near future, viz: to have light receptacles capable of holding, twenty-five, fifty and 100 of such flowers as could be handled in that manner, such as violets, carnations, certain roses (of course it would be impractical in the case of extra Beauties, etc.), most bulb stock, and several other subjects. This method of displaying the goods has been followed in Covent Garden, London, for years, and I have often wondered why it had not been adopted here. I feel sure, however, that American ingenuity will contrive receptacles that will fill the bill. These remarks about shipping would be incomplete if I fail to mention two other important items, viz: cleanliness of all paper, etc., used, and grading. We are all aware how liable one is, if he be a few short of an even number of firsts, to put in the required number of good seconds; but it should also be borne in mind that the prospective buyer will almost always spot those very ones, frequently with the effect of declining the deal, or else standing out for a reduction in price.

Specialists.

The specialist is in a distinct class by himself, not alone as regards the goods he handles, but in the enviable position he enjoys in regard to the disposal of the same. Specialists as a rule are so well known, not only in their neighborhood, but further afield, that the judicious use of the advertising columns of the trade papers in their case is all that is necessary. These remarks only apply to the "bona fides," as many call themselves in this class that have no earthly reason for so doing. I once heard a witty son of the Green Isle, in answer to the question of, "What is a specialist?" reply, "A man that thinks he is one, blows his own trumpet, but the rale thing, why, other people blow it for him."

The majority of the foregoing remarks have dealt principally with the cut flower trade. In regard to the plant business, few cities are large enough to warrant a plant market, and it seems to me that the methods at present in vogue with the gentlemen engaged in this line are as practical as any that can be recommended, but I cannot miss this opportunity of paying tribute to the vast improvement of the last few years in regard to the methods of packing plants. When one looks back a few years, and remembers the condition in which one received a shipment of plants, he cannot fail to highly appreciate the great improvements that have taken place. The only people who have lost by these improvements are the express companies.

In conclusion I would state that in this paper I did not start out with any idea of evolving a new mode of procedure, but have tried to offer a few suggestions that might improve existing conditions, which seem to answer their purpose satisfactorily.

UTILIZING A SASH HOUSE.

Will you kindly inform me if I can root carnation cutting in a small sash house, adjoining a large greenhouse? There is no heat in the sash house excepting what comes through from the house adjoining, there being no partition between the two. J. B.

While the house you describe does not give ideal conditions for propagating, yet I would not say that you could not root your carnation cuttings in it. You will find that during extreme cold weather you will have trouble in keeping frost out, or at least you will have a very low temperature. So that instead of rooting your cuttings in six weeks, it may take them eight to ten weeks, and not as high a percentage will root. It will pay you to run at least one pipe under the bench, and run it near the outside wall, regardless of what you intend to grow in the house. A. F. J. B.

Allentown, Pa.—A greenhouse 18x41 feet is being erected by the Lord & Burnham Co., of New York, on the grounds of E. M. Young. A ten-foot addition to be used as a workshop will also be erected.

Hampton, Ia.—The Curtis Floral Co. has completed a new range, 48x75, near its old greenhouses, of the A. Dietch Co.'s patent short-roof construction. This is to be used exclusively for carnations and roses. In addition a new fern room, 20x32, has been built during the last year. The firm has nearly doubled its output in this time.

ROOTING GERANIUMS.

Will you please tell me the best way of rooting geranium cuttings? My old method has failed the last couple of years. X. Y. Z.

We employ only two methods of rooting these common but popular plants. From September 1 till February 1 we try to select cuttings of a firm growth, cutting just below a joint. In many soft-wooded plants this cutting just below a joint may be of little consequence, but with the succulent geranium we think it important, and, as it takes no longer, it is well to observe it. The above applies to all the flowering zonal varieties, of which we may select Mrs. E. G. Hill, Nutt and Alphonse Ricard as types. Scented-leaved and variegated varieties I prefer to put in the sand, and if you choose you can propagate all your geraniums in the sand, only it is a waste of time and space and they do not make as good plants as those rooted in small pots.

Briefly, our method is, cut the shoot at a joint, leaving only one fully developed leaf and one not fully developed. Pot firmly, making sure the soil is firm and compact at the base of the cutting. Give them one thorough watering. Set them on a bench in a house where the night temperature is 50 degrees, and do not water again until they are decidedly dry. At least ninety per cent should be rooted in a month. In the warm sand of a propagating bed in the winter months you should not lose one per cent.

RHODODENDRONS.

Please tell me if rhododendrons intended for next Easter should be treated the same as azaleas. X. Y. Z.

Rhododendrons, although belonging to the same family, want a different treatment from the Indian azaleas, which are those we grow for Easter. The rhododendron is a hardy shrub in our northern states, where the soil suits it. The azalea will endure a temperature almost to the freezing point, but still is a tender plant. It is necessary to keep many varieties of azaleas in a low temperature during the winter months or they would be in flower before there is a demand for them. The proper place for rhododendrons would be a deep coldframe where severe frost could be excluded (a few degrees would not hurt) and the first part of February bring them into a night temperature of 55 degrees and give them a daily syringing. If you can't do this, then keep them in the coldest house you have. W. S.

OBITUARY.

Claude Harglerode.

The lifeless body of Claude Harglerode, 13 years old, son of U. G. Harglerode, the well-known florist of Shippensburg, Pa., was found beside the tracks of the C. V. R. R. a short distance east of town on the evening of November 21. Nothing could be learned as to how the accident happened, though he evidently had been struck by a train. Claude was a bright boy and his parents have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM is reported to be in good demand, but not in large supply.

IT is reported by jobbers that the cheaper grades of folding Christmas bells have this year sold better than ever.

HIGHLAND, ILL.—Fred E. Holland, who last year had the misfortune to lose his greenhouse and plants by fire, opened a vegetable store to be known as the Garden Store, November 27, in the Mosimann building.

MRS. CHARLES H. MAYNARD, of Detroit, reports that the ladies are promptly sending in their fees to join the Auxiliary to S. A. F., and with their checks come words of good cheer for its success.

ADVERTISING AND PROGRESS.

The following is an extract from the address of John J. Hamilton, of Des Moines, Ia., delivered before the congressional commission sitting at New York to consider changes in the law under which newspapers and periodicals are admitted to the mails:

"The publication of newspapers and magazines is a private business; there is no reason of public policy which calls for its regulation by law. * * * Men should be free to publish poor papers and magazines, for in these days of costly and beautiful papers, woe be to the publisher who does not keep pace with the improvements others are introducing. They should be free to accept all the reputable advertising they can obtain, because the American people value and read the advertising as thoroughly as the regular reading matter and usually refuse to take publications which do not contain large quantities of it. The subscriber profits largely by modern advertising.

"To limit the volume or relative proportion of advertising which a publication may carry under penalty of exclusion from the mails would be to destroy the most valuable asset of every notably successful publication of every class in America today. The right to sell all the advertising they can make room for is more valuable to them than their stately buildings and costly mechanical equipment. It is the quintessence of their well earned success. It rests on genuine merit and is the fruit of honest service."

SPECIAL CHRISTMAS ISSUE.

The Special Christmas Number of the REVIEW will be issued as usual, being mailed to the trade on the morning of December 13. The special issues of the REVIEW are of such great interest to the whole trade that the advertising in them is increasing not only steadily but rapidly. Advertisers will give us much assistance in turning out a well printed Christmas Number by sending advertising copy early.

COUNCIL OF HORTICULTURE.

A meeting of the National Council of Horticulture was held at the Auditorium Annex, Chicago, November 9 and 10. There were present Messrs. J. C. Vaughan, C. E. Kendel, W. F. Kasting, Prof. L. R. Taft, Prof. W. W. Tracy, H. C. Irish, J. H. Burdett, E. V. Hallock and John N. May.

Mr. Burdett gave an exhaustive report on the press bureau work as conducted during the past year, after which detailed plans for the continuation of the service were considered. The relative merits of the clipping sheet used by the American Civic Association as compared with the plan of the council by sending mimeograph copies of matter for publication direct to large papers and to press syndicates was discussed and it was voted to continue the latter plan and to begin another series of articles early in the New Year.

Reports were made of an unusual demand for certain seeds, the cause of which had been traced directly to their exploitation through the press bureau last spring

A list of subjects to be written up for the coming year was presented by Mr. Kendel and the secretary was instructed to correspond with nurserymen and florists for further subjects.

A report was read from Robert Craig, on a visit to the Jamestown Exposition Co., in the interests of a horticultural exhibition and congress. It showed that the exposition company is not in a position to offer cash premiums for a special horticultural exhibition but in his opinion the project could be successfully carried out if the money was guaranteed by individuals. It was voted to arrange for a horticultural congress at Norfolk during the exposition period and Prof. W. W. Tracy was appointed to draft a call to supplement the one which had been issued and to arrange a preliminary program. H. C. IRISH, Sec.

STATE OF GENERAL TRADE.

R. G. Dun & Co. say that "Commercial operations in wholesale and jobbing lines were, on the whole, of satisfactory proportions last week. Holiday goods have begun to move unusually early in a retail way and many reorders have been received by distributers. In a few lines trade has been retarded to some extent by weather conditions, but transactions in the aggregate surpass those of a year ago, which were unsually large at this season.

"The coal situation is being complicated more and more by the car shortage, and in some districts west there is claimed to be such a scarcity that farmers have been obliged to shell their corn in order to obtain the cobs to burn for fuel. In the local market the cold weather has increased the demand, and prices have been easily maintained and in some cases advanced.

"In staple lines, including clothing, footwear, furniture, hardware, business has been maintained at recent levels, with a general satisfactory condition aside from the difficulty experienced in obtaining prompt shipment."

THE TARIFF ON GLASS.

Pursuant of the action taken by the S. A. F. convention at Dayton, in appointing a committee to consider what might be done with the glass tariff, the correspondence below is of interest to everyone in the craft.

Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1906.
Hon. Sereno E. Payne, Auburn, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I am constrained to address you upon a matter of considerable interest to a large craft of men who use window glass in their business to the amount of millions of square feet, and that is the florists of the United States.

At the annual convention of the Society of American Florists, held at Dayton, O., one of the most important matters brought up was that of the duty now imposed upon window glass, which is an advance so much greater than existed prior to 1896, and which tariff raised the price of this commodity very materially per pound on every box of glass used.

With the knowledge of your standing in congress, and being a member of the committee appointed by the convention, I have for some time thought of laying this matter before you and to ask that, now election is over and we know how the drift of affairs will be the next two years, if the matter of reduction of tariff rates would stand any chance of receiving consideration at the approaching session of congress, or if at the present stage of public opinion it would be labor lost to attempt to do anything directly without pronounced agitation.

The greenhouse men of the United States, who run into the thousands, all feel that the present high cost of this necessary article is to them very largely enhanced by the existing excessive duty, and if this duty could be brought down to the rate prior to the tariff of 1897, that it would be an economic gain, which would work no harm to producers, because many of us believe and think that the tariff as it exists today is overdone and the party that should correct the matter is the republican, in control of the majority.

Our General Ketcham is dead, so we cannot go to the old gentleman for advice as to what we might gain if we went to Washington.

Enclosed is an article from a florist trade paper, which shows the interest by the florist craft.

We should be glad to hear from you upon this important subject.

Yours respectfully,
BENJAMIN HAMMOND.

Committee on Ways and Means.
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.
Auburn, N. Y., Nov. 21, 1906.

Mr. Benjamin Hammond,
Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 20th inst. received. Congress meets this year December 3, and the term of this congress expires on March 4, giving three months, with the exception of the holidays, for what work we have to do. The time is barely sufficient to give consideration to the appropriation bills which will come up. All would agree it would be entirely impossible to pass a tariff bill.

While you desire but one item of the tariff changed, this could not be considered without taking up the whole subject of tariff revision and considering all the claims for changes to be made to the different schedules. This, of course, is a matter that requires much time and deliberation.

I read with interest your statement in the Weekly Florists' Review. While we imported $54,000,000 of cylinder, crown and common window glass in 1896, and but $18,000,000 in round numbers in 1905, it would appear that our workmen had $36,000,000 worth more of glass to manufacture at the latter date than in 1896. This means, of course, prosperity to the workmen in the glass manufacturing business.

You would readily admit that your business had been much better since 1897 than it was in the three years preceding that year, under the Wilson tariff act, and the year or two before that, when the country was prostrated because of the uncertainty of what the Wilson people might do, for your business must be very dependent upon the general prosperity of the country. It would be well for you to take into consideration whether it is not better to have the country generally prosperous under the present act, which brings prosperity to your business, rather than to restore the glass business to its condition under the Wilson tariff, thereby bringing your business back to the same condition of affairs. I only throw out this suggestion for your consideration, because when the subject of tariff revision is taken up, I shall hope to hear from the florists on this subject.

Yours very truly,
SERENO E. PAYNE.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

November has without doubt been a disappointment to most of the trade in Chicago, both wholesalers and retailers. The middle of the month saw a greater depression in the wholesale market than is usual at the height of the chrysanthemum season, and the light demand continued right up to Thanksgiving. While great quantities of stock were moved, and in some lines prices were high, still the volume of business for November does not exceed that of last year. And Chicago is so accustomed to steadily and rapidly increasing volumes of sales that a halt in the advance is something in the nature of a shock.

For a full fortnight before Thanksgiving shipping trade was less than usual at this season and a long period of disagreeable weather, which killed street sales, had much effect upon the city stores that depend upon transient trade. The high class stores, catering to the best society business, are almost the only ones which did not feel the slackening of business during the month.

What the cause or causes may have been is hard to say. In every line of business in Chicago great activity prevails and throughout the country prosperity is at a higher level than in any previous year. It is doubtless merely a combination of circumstances which will shortly give way to normal conditions, and we shall have a rush in volume sufficient to offset the temporary slackening in pace.

Thanksgiving.

Writing on the eve of Thanksgiving, no more than a general summary of the trade is possible, but it seems quite evident that the business for Thanksgiving has not exceeded that of last year, although it must be taken into account that last year's Thanksgiving demand was exceptionally heavy. The prediction that supplies of stock would be ample has been thoroughly justified. Monday the market was heavily loaded with stock. Most of it was held at the increased prices anticipated for Thanksgiving. However, the day did not prove to be more than a normal Monday with most houses, city buying not being in evidence, for the retailers foresaw a break in prices. Monday night found the market far from cleaned up.

Tuesday was the big shipping day and the volume of business was large, nearly all good stock being well cleaned up. The weather for several days has been unfavorable to stock and complaint is anticipated because of the softness of stock, especially carnations, which were not of average shipping quality.

Wednesday morning round the market heavily supplied, a part of the stock being carried over from Tuesday, and shipping demand being over there was a weakening in prices, most apparent on carnations. Fair stock broke to as low as $2 per hundred where the buyer would clean up the lot. Receipts of violets were light.

The supply of chrysanthemums has been something tremendous, many thousands of small Bonnaffons being sold at moderate prices. The principal white was Timothy Eaton, and the supply was so heavy that really grand flowers went to the Greeks at almost their own figures. There were abundant supplies of roses in all departments, but really good stock cleaned up well, for much of it was soft and Maids were decidedly off color.

In the carnation market receipts proved ample. The growers had been holding them for the extra prices and buyers were reluctant to pay the big money asked in advance; consequently the large orders which usually go out were missing, and no doubt growers will be disappointed with the average returns. It is undoubtedly the fact that if the price of carnations is forced too high it simply serves to shut off the business.

The results with violets go to prove the truth of the old assertion that many times the price is higher a week before a holiday than it is at the holiday itself. Last week the market was strong on violets, but it had weakened by Monday. The retailers did not buy as heavily as usual, remembering the time when they had violets left and preferring that the wholesalers should have the experience this time.

There has been little change in any other item of stock this week. Valley, however, has shown a reversal of form. A week ago money would not buy it, and this week it commands scarcely any money. A large supply is available.

Various Notes.

The E. F. Winterson Co. received a carload of green last Friday and on Monday put a force of girls at work making wreathing.

At E. H. Hunt's W. E. Lynch says the quality of the red winterberries for this season is exceptionally good. There has just begun to be a demand for this specialty.

Cattleyas are exceptionally scarce and have advanced in price. McKellar is receiving a large variety of other orchids, some beautiful things among them. Dendrobium formosum, white with yellow throat, is being used by the leading retailers in the absence of cattleyas, and a large supply is available.

James Hain, on West Fifty-first place, thinks well of The Queen as an early white chrysanthemum. It is not a new kind, but with him has for several years been a money-maker, surpassing most of the new kinds he has bought. As he grows it it is a fine, large flower without a spot of yellow center and with fine, stiff stem. It is a good keeper and shipper.

Frank Beu has been cutting pompon chrysanthemums in considerable quantity. They are grown four or five flowers to the spray and are bunched in fifties. Mrs. Beu, who does the selling at the market, says they have gone like hot cakes at $1 per bunch.

The George Wittbold Co. reports an excellent wholesale business for the last couple of months. They have no salesmen on the road, depending exclusively on trade paper advertising for their business.

Peter Reinberg is one of the committee of the city council sitting to hear the franchise claims of the two rival telephone companies. It has thus far been a windy conflict, with apparently little progress.

Jensen & Dekema have been cutting some fine chrysanthemums. Space will now be used for propagating carnations.

The building of the new skyscraper at the corner of Monroe and State streets has had a disastrous effect upon the trade of the several stores just east on Monroe street. J. C. Bruchner could not stand the strain, but M. Smith will see him through to the completion of the building and the reopening of the street, when trade will no doubt again be good with him.

B. Abrahamson, formerly at 343 W. Taylor street, is now at 156 Blue Island avenue.

John Zech says that his shipping business for the Tuesday preceding Thanksgiving day was more than double what it was for the same day a year ago. It is the second year for Zech & Mann.

Bassett & Washburn have a considerable number of rose cuttings in the sand.

N. J. Wietor has shaved his mustache. He refers to it as "an operation." He says that Wietor Bros. will not sell chrysanthemum stock plants this fall, reserving all the stock of the newer varieties for propagation for next spring, when they expect to do a record-breaking business in chrysanthemum cuttings.

F. F. Benthey, of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., says he wishes they had a couple more houses of Killarney rose. It pays them better than any other variety, and that is saying a great deal when it is stated that Bride brought them 96 cents per plant last year. John Poehlmann, of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., also says a good word for Killarney. They sold the best of this variety at 15 cents each for Thanksgiving.

George Reinberg grafted some 30,000 Brides and Maids last season and is well pleased with the result.

Vaughan & Sperry say that shipping trade has not been up to their expecta-

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The W. L. Rock Flower Co. issued invitations to a "private flower display" November 21 and 22, and attracted many of the best people in the town.

COLUMBUS, O.—The new plant of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., on West Fifth avenue, is completed. The company now has ten greenhouses which range from seventy-five to 150 feet in length, and contain 55,000 square feet of glass. C. K. Siebert is president and G. H. Woodrow secretary and treasurer. F. D. Siebert is general manager.

UTICA, N. Y.

Club Exhibition.

The Utica Florists' Club had its annual banquet in Elks' hall November 22. An attractive feature of the entertainment was the exhibition of flowers made in the large assembly hall. Here were three large tables filled with vases. These were mostly chrysanthemums, although roses and carnations were not lacking. The display was a fine one. Many of the exhibits had been sent from a distance.

The largest exhibitor was the Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., which was represented by a large collection of chrysanthemums, six blooms of each, and a number of carnations.

John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., showed Imperial and Pink Imperial carnations in pleasing form.

Charles H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., sent a fine display of pompon and single chrysanthemums.

MEDIUM AND SHORT

Buyers whose trade does not call for extra long, select stock will please remember that no matter how high a grower's average quality may be, a certain part of the cut is bound to be medium to short. Our reputation for producing the best stock in the West is so well established that buyers naturally come to us for Fancy, but some forget that we are equally well able to supply their less exacting needs; in fact, we have an especially attractive proposition for regular buyers of medium grade stock. brought a splendid vase of Carnation Winsor.

Alex. J. Guttman, New York, brought Victory, and the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., was represented by Red Riding Hood and Aristocrat.

Among the exhibitors from Utica and nearby towns were W. A. Rowlands, who showed rose-pink Enchantress and roses; George H. Benedict, Yorkville, American Beauty roses; Joseph Traudt, Canajoharie, Gloire de Lorraine begonias; Robert Train, Gloversville, roses; Wm. P. Pfeiffer, Carnation Moonlight; J. C. Graham, Little Falls, Enchantress carnations; E. J. Byam, Rome, carnations; Frank McGowan, a large collection of chrysanthemums; Baker & Co., fine roses.

After inspecting the exhibits the members of the club with their wives and lady friends, making in all a party of eighty, sat down to an excellent banquet. Among those present were Seward Hakes, Theodore Schesh and Jacob Friis, Ilion; J. O. Graham, Little Falls; Joseph Traudt, Canajoharie; J. Kilbourn, Clinton; E. J. Byam, Rome; Robert Main, Gloversville; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown; P. R. Quinlan, Syracuse, and A. J. Guttman, New York.

Frank J. Baker called to order and said that all felt greatly obligated to the committee which had made so great a success of the show, J. C. Spencer, Wm. Pfeiffer and Frank McGowan.

F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, was first called on, and spoke briefly. He said in part: "I have enjoyed my visit immensely. It is a most pleasant feature of horticultural banquets to find ladies present. I came here to spend a few hours and I have visited Mr. Nicholson's place at Barneveld. It is like bringing coals to Newcastle to bring carnations to Utica, for you have the new varieties here."

A. J. Guttman, of New York, said: "I wish to thank you for the handsome way I have been entertained. I enjoyed your beautiful exhibits. I am enthusiastic as a florist, and you can appreciate the pleasure I derive from such a gathering as this. You no doubt enjoy it equally well, or you would not bring these festivities about. It is most pleasant and profitable to attend these festivities. I again thank you."

P. R. Quinlan, of Syracuse, was then called on and spoke entertainingly. He paid his respects to the toastmaster, and spoke of the good times he had had at previous banquets, as well as this. He had enjoyed his afternoon and evening with the boys and the girls as well. He thanked Mr. McGowan for insisting that the ladies be present. He compared the flowers grown today with those grown years ago, and found a great improvement. The happiest days of his life had been spent in the florists' business.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business has been good. The market remains well cleaned up on roses and carnations, but mums have been a glut all along. Roses are bringing as high as $8 and $10 per hundred for fancy, and scarce at that. Carnations were bringing from $3 to $5 up to Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemums sell at almost any price from $4 per hundred to $3 per dozen. Greens are plentiful, but violets are scarce.

Club Meeting.

A flower show held in connection with the Detroit Florists' Club's last meeting, November 21, attracted an unusually large attendance.

H. Pearce was unanimously elected a member of the club. Leopold Mallest, of Mount Clemens, made application for membership. H. Knope, foreman at J. Breitmeyer & Son's greenhouses, was given a vote of thanks for an excellent paper read by him on the culture and handling of chrysanthemums.

Fred Pantke, of Grosse Pointe, who has been having considerable trouble with the leaf-miner eating the foliage of his mums, was able to show the members where this pest originated. Mr. Pantke had in a small bottle a number of small green flies hatched from the eggs laid by the leaf-miner. The latter, he claims, can be traced back to these flies, the result being that many of the members blame the use of horse manure for the whole trouble.

P. J. Lynch, with the Dingee & Conard Co., of West Grove, Pa., who was present, complimented the club on its fine attendance.

An exhibition of Christmas novelties will be the feature of the evening of December 5.

After adjournment the entertainment committee provided a fine lunch, after which several hours were spent in inspecting the blooms and plants on exhibition, as follows:

vase of Aristocrat and vase of Red Riding Hood carnations, arrived in fine condition.

E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., a shipment of mums which arrived the morning after the exhibition. It included Golden Dome, John Macrae's sport from Yellow Eaton.

J. M. Dickson, of Northville, Mich., showed a fine vase of Bonnaffon and Chadwick.

A. J. Stahelin, of Greenfield, Mich., showed a fine vase of Arline; Dr. Enguehard, exceptionally fine; Weeks and other mums.

A. B. Lewis, of Pontiac, Mich., who is one of the regulars now, was on hand with a fine assortment of fifteen varieties. White Bonnaffon is his favorite. Mr. Lewis has a white sport of Maud Dean which made quite a hit.

Mr. De Carteret, of Grosse Pointe, Mich., showed some well grown mums.

H. Smith, of Grosse Pointe, had twelve varieties of mums, all fine blooms, including a grand yellow variety, Gold Mine.

J. E. Smith, of Wyandotte, Mich., attracted an unusual amount of attention with some beautiful large white chrysanthemum blooms, of a fine incurved shape and elegant stem. They are seedlings of Mr. Smith's from an old variety known as Moonlight. Some good pink and white sweet peas were also brought from Wyandotte.

Fred Pantke, of Grosse Pointe, staged a most creditable vase of fifteen varieties of mums.

A. N. Von Boeselager, of Mount Clemens, elicited favorable comment with three vases of carnations. A pink sport of Lawson, about the shade of Joost, originated by Mr. Von Boeselager, looks as though it may have a bright future. His fine red seedling from a cross between Harlowarden and Enchantress, and a vase of white known as Moonlight, were good.

J. Breitmeyer's Sons had by far the largest exhibit. In chrysanthemums they had about fifteen vases of different varieties, the most noticeable being Mrs. Winkley Smith, a beautiful yellow-bronze. They also had a fine lot of roses grown under Fred Breitmeyer's supervision. A vase of Killarney with unusually long stems would have made any Irishman proud.

Robert Klagge, of Mount Clemens, resorted to roses for his display. His Maids and Richmonds were fine, but a vase of about twenty-five La Detroit, with stems and flowers the size of a good American Beauty loomed above every other rose in the room.

Beard Bros. showed some nicely grown mums, also some fine Jerusalem cherry plants.

J. F. Sullivan, though not the largest exhibitor, did much credit to the space occupied with a number of vases of mums.

B. Schroeter was on hand with a fine vase of his Rose-pink Enchantress, which received much favorable comment.

The Park and Boulevard Commission did itself proud with a fine exhibit of some standard mums and a large collection of new and rare plants.

orchids and violets for the opening of Parliament.

The first shipment of Rose-pink Enchantress was packed by B. Schroeter's men this week. Orders for upwards of 100,000 cuttings have been booked to date.

Among the visitors last week were: A. J. Young, with A. P. Schultz & Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Henry Kalben, with Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J.; A. F. Longren, with the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill. H. S.

TOPEKA, KAN.—Hiram Hulse contemplates giving up his greenhouse business and intends to move to Mankato, Jewell county, to look after his farm and orchard.

ATLANTA, GA.—Miss Gertrude Blair, formerly at Des Moines and for the last couple of seasons with the Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., as decorator in the cut flower department, now is with the Atlanta Floral Co.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The close approach of Thanksgiving has had the usual effect of stiffening values. An abundant supply of chrysanthemums has been forthcoming since our last report. Among other sorts in addition to those previously named are Gold Mine, Chadwick and some fine Jeanne Nonin. The supply of these flowers will probably last until Christmas, but they will not cut much of a figure after the present week.

Carnations are now coming of much finer quality, stems twenty-four to thirty inches long being seen in some cases. As usual, red are in best demand and whites the least sought after. Roses are also of excellent quality. Beauty, Liberty and Richmond have stiffened in price, but other kinds have not made much advance.

Violets have held at the dollar mark for a few days. The big football games caused a run on these and crimson flowers November 24. A good supply of Campbell is arriving, but these do not sell so well as the singles, which quite outclass them in size, color and length of stem. Callas are scarce and a small supply of Easter lilies is arriving. Scarlet bouvardia has sold well, pink and white more slowly. Paper Whites are not arriving plentifully as yet. Lily of the valley at the commission houses is of good quality and sufficient for all requirements. Green stock remains about the same.

Various Notes.

The chrysanthemums shown at the last club meeting by Duncan Finlayson were grown in 9-inch pots, each pot being allowed to carry from six to ten flowers. These were almost equal to exhibition flowers and this method of culture should commend itself to many who cannot spare benchroom in summer. Mr. Finlayson's pots are kept outdoors all summer.

James Munroe, a well-known Beverly gardener, died on November 22, after a long illness, at the age of 78. Deceased was employed by Amory A. Lawrence, a well-known summer resident.

John Macrae's new sport from Yellow Eaton chrysanthemum was exhibited at the Park street flower market November 24 and was greatly admired. The name, Golden Dome, is an appropriate one.

J. T. Butterworth had a splendid lot of Cattleya labiata for Thanksgiving, many carrying six flowers to a sheath and a few seven. Mr. Butterworth is hard to beat as a cattleya grower and is not far behind with other orchids.

The Boston Sunday Herald devoted a page of its issue of November 25 to an interesting illustrated account of the Harvard Botanic Gardens, over which Robert Cameron presides.

Mann Bros. are among the few growers now marketing Easter lilies. They also have Paper Whites and Romans of fine quality.

The Princess of Wales violets William Sim is bringing in this season appear to be of even finer quality than former years, which is saying a good deal, but the best is none too good for Mr. Sim.

All the seed stores are practically sold out of Dutch bulbs and sales have far exceeded those of former years.

The landscape gardening classes, organized by the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, are proving a great success. Many of the leading florists and gardeners in the vicinity of Boston are members, in addition to the younger men. An increasing number of calls for this class of work is being made on florists and the course of class studies and field days will better equip them for the successful carrying out of this branch of their business.

N. F. McCarthy & Co. will dispose of the greenhouses of the late W. A. Bock, of North Cambridge, at public auction, on November 30, by order of the guardians of the legatee.

Weather remains unusually open for the end of November. Lawns in many places are dotted with dandelions in bloom. Violets and pompon chrysanthemums are also still flowering outdoors.

Among other seedling carnations S. J. Goddard has a white one raised by J. H. Cushing, Quidnick, R. I., which is promising.

Ernest Wild's many friends are pleased to hear of the advent of a ten-pound daughter to his household November 20.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The business during the last week was erratic, some days good, while others were a bit draggy. The quality of the stock is improving, and from now on will move in a lively fashion, as this week will see most of the chrysanthemums out of the way, excepting some of the large later varieties. Beauties are none too plentiful, and in fact all kinds of roses have shortened up in supply, and will average much better in price. Richmonds are getting much better, and from now on the indications are that the demand will keep pace with the supply. The two games of football which will be played in this city will no doubt benefit the violet market, and there probably will be a great demand for them. It is wonderful what a difference these games make in the demand for these flowers. Orchids, when not bruised, are selling well, and the local supply is good. Green stuff is moving off much better, there being a good demand for spray bunches of plumosus. A limited amount of holly is used for Thanksgiving, and is fine. Carnations are getting better, and are advancing a little in price, and will no doubt clean up much better this week. Gardenias are still scarce, there being not enough to go around. Stevia and bouvardia have increased in quantity and are moving nicely.

An Important Move.

The street has been aware for a year or so that real estate men were vying with each other in their efforts to induce H. Bayersdorfer & Co. to move their establishment to some one of the large buildings situated in the heart of this city, between the two great railroad terminals. This arrangement was completed some months ago, the property selected being the large, five-story building at 1129 Arch street, which is one square from the Reading terminal and three squares from Broad street station. Improvements have been in progress ever since, not merely repairs, but improvements of the most modern character—electric lights, steam heat, passenger and freight elevators, fire sprinklers, showroom skylights and a well arranged office being especial features.

The entire establishment—warehouse, factory and salesrooms—were moved last week to the new quarters, and business is now going on with a degree of precision and dispatch that make one wonder at the executive ability that can keep the wheels running smoothly during a great removal. The ground floor, finished in oak, contains on the right the offices, on the left showcases filled with choice wreaths and metallic designs, broadening further back into two aisles bordered by three rows of showcases lighted by skylights from the floor above. The elevators are further back and at the rear is the shipping department, opening on a little street, an indispensable requirement. The second floor is an immense basket showroom and warehouse. The third is filled with other stock, including many cases of immortelles and other staples. The fourth floor is the factory and workshop. The fifth is the roof paintshop and drying rooms. A large basement provides additional valuable space.

Various Notes.

Jacob Becker's new place, Forty-ninth and Chestnut streets, was damaged by fire last Monday morning to the extent of $2,000. The fire is thought to have originated in the boiler shed, doing considerable damage to a house of Killarney and Franz Deegen. Mr. Becker is widely known as a successful pot rose grower, and the trade will be sorry to learn of his loss.

W. Faust, of the William Graham Co., is laid up with typhoid fever. His friends hope for his speedy recovery.

William J. Baker is receiving some fine smilax, which is creating quite a demand.

Thomas W. Baylis, of Westgrove, Pa., is sending in some fine chrysanthemums, notably white and yellow Eaton, Minnie Bailey and Major Bonnaffon, to John McIntyre.

The Floral Exchange is sending some Brides, Maids and Gates of good quality to Eugene Bernheimer. He is also receiving some good Boston Market, Killarney and Chatenay from J. L. Reuter.

The boys are all wondering why William Stevens, John Burton's salesman, does not pass around the cigars. They think a ten-pound boy is surely worth it.

Joe McCormick, formerly with Eugene Weiss, is now located with Julius Wolf, 1617 North Nineteenth street.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., has just returned from an extended trip through the west and reports the country in a most prosperous condition. The florists, as a rule, say that the season so far has been the best they have had in years, taxing their facilities to get through with orders booked. The demand for red goods has been exceedingly large.

Through an unfortunate delay in transmission the removal notice of H. Bayersdorfer & Co. was too late for last week's issue. M. Rice & Co. have the credit of being the first supply house to locate in the zone lying between the two great terminals. This will be the great supply district of the whole country.

Myers & Samtman have their place in fine condition. Their crops promise well through December and January, the new house being especially heavy. Their entire place is planted in Beauties, with the exception of one bench of their new rose.

Henry A. Dreer Co. is busily engaged distributing azaleas. The stock is exceptionally well budded this season.

Holly is being freely offered this Thanksgiving, a November novelty, so to speak.

A. Farenwald, of Roslyn, is pushing the plants in his new Richmond range in great style. He was late in getting heat on the houses, but is now being rewarded with a profusion of bottom breaks.

John Curwen, of Berwyn, has been cutting some nice chrysanthemums in his new house, 14x70. Violets follow. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The business last week among the retailers was reported good all over the city. Transient trade especially was good, also funeral work. A number of large weddings and dinners were pleasing to the florists in the fashionable district. The wholesalers also have done business. Shipping trade has greatly improved. Stock of all kinds has been quite plentiful, with prices not so high. Thanksgiving day prices went into effect November 26.

Chrysanthemums still come in plentifully in all grades. Extra fine Eaton, Appleton, Ivory and Bonnaffon were in last week. Carnations are fine. The fancy stock is selling out clean. Lady Bountiful and Enchantress have a great call. Roses are much improved in quality. Beauties are somewhat scarce. Smaller roses are plentiful, with prices low. November 26 prices went up on all grades. Violets are in big demand. California is the only variety coming in. Bulbous stock is scarce; nothing in the market but a few Paper Whites. Stevia is selling well. Plenty of good smilax and other greens are to be had.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., spent November 23 in the city and were guests of Miss Tillie Meinhardt. Mr. Vesey is on his way to Mexico with a party of friends. Mrs. Vesey returned home the next day.

J. F. Ammann and his foreman, Henry Blixen, of Edwardsville, were in the city November 23 viewing the carnation exhibition at Kuehn's.

Charles L. Connon has opened a flower stand at the Grand Leader, one of our largest department stores. He says business is good.

L. N. Van Hook, who has his place at Ferguson, Mo., is sending in a fine lot of California violets daily.

George Angermueller is again at his post, having recovered from his illness.

Smith & Young, of Indianapolis, are sending to this market fine Bride roses, also first-class Maids.

W. C. Smith & Co. have bought out the wholesale establishment of Frank M. Ellis and will continue the business at the old stand, 1316 Pine street. Mr. Smith is well liked among the local trade and should make a success from the start. F. M. Ellis will return to Panama to look after his banana plantation.

Henry Ostertag has been on a hunting trip and returned well loaded with game, and is now out working hard on subscriptions for the flower show fund.

November 23 Charlie Kuehn gave the growers a treat by giving them a look at new varieties in carnations. The exhibition was fine. Among the varieties seen were Bonnie Maid, Red Chief, White Perfection, Red Riding Hood and Aristocrat. Nearly all the local growers viewed the exhibition.

Next Monday night, December 3, the florist bowlers will meet at the new De Soto bowling alleys. Numbers 7 and 8 on the third floor have been reserved for them every Monday night.

The officers of the Florists' Club met in the parlor of the Hotel Rozier November 22. The object was to outline a program for the next meeting of the club and to discuss plans with the flower show committees regarding the big guarantee fund. The officers met at the same place November 27. J. J. B.

I made a trip last week to H. J. Weber & Sons' nursery to see their two modern rose houses, erected about eighteen months ago. I found Walter Weber in charge. The roses were the picture of health, much improved as compared with last year's stock. Most varieties were off crop, but Mr. Weber said he had been cutting quite heavily until recently, more especially of Killarney, which certainly is a great producer. The Perles were the best of all, a regular mass of blooms and buds. I was thinking that if the Perle king, the amiable and redoubtable Fred Ammann, could have the chance to exhibit against this stock it would make even him go some to beat such blooms. I felt quite envious of Mr. Weber, with such great advantages, viz.: good houses and such a fine location, away from the smoke-impregnated air of the city that I have to contend with in trying to grow good roses in the oldest rose houses in St. Louis—sixteen years old. I find it almost out of the question to produce No. 1 stock any more.

F. J. Fillmore.

Silver City, New Mex.—Miss Kate Crawford has completed a new greenhouse of Foley manufacture. The heating is done by a Clow hot-water heater and all arrangements are of the latest type. Miss Crawford has been in the business only about a year but her success has been gratifying.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The weather continues most unseasonable, almost a summer temperature prevailing. Its effect on the wholesale market may be imagined. Values have receded and the general mental condition prevailing on Saturday and Monday was not at all optimistic. Beauties, however, have held steady and prices are satisfactory. The flood of chrysanthemums has been too much for the market to assimilate and all varieties of cut flowers feel the weight of the depression. The horse show has lost its pull. It is no longer a consideration. Peace to its ashes. It was quite a friend in the years gone by. The orchid crop is lighter as the days grow shorter and the flower is getting so popular there soon will not be enough to go around, I fear. Plenty of lilies and valley. Roman hyacinths are here and narcissi of splendid quality. Richmond and Killarney roses are as popular as ever.

The retailers all seem to be busy and their windows are unique. Some interesting novelties appear. Small had some fine Whitmani ferns and choice Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Warendorff had beautiful baskets. Bowe has added to his forces and keeps a very attractive window. Van Pragg's two stores are always beautiful.

Various Notes.

Asked for a description of some of his latest work, Myer, at 609 Madison avenue, said: "Recently I was called upon to furnish unique table decorations for dinners given to Sir Thomas Lipton, Sir Purdon Clarke and Count Von Gerster, by a society lady who will be nameless for obvious reasons. At two of them I used a 24-inch round brass wire design, each circle a little higher to the center, which was the apex. Around the circles was twined Farleyense fern, and glass tubes filled with water were placed at short distance, each containing cattleyas and valley, producing a dainty, fairy-like effect, and one that would be durable and lasting during a prolonged sitting. At the third function the wire design was oval, 36x24 inches, with similar floral decoration. The designs were made by Reed & Keller."

Alexander J. Guttman again visited John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., last week, and is satisfied that the two new carnations, Imperial and Pink Imperial, will prove to be valuable acquisitions; and he has arranged with Mr. Haines to disseminate these two varieties this season. Imperial is a variegated variety, with delicate pink ground sprinkled with deeper pink, and Pink Imperial is a Lawson shade pink of great promise.

Luis F. Carrillo, of Carrillo & Baldwin, Secaucus, leaves December 1 to spend six months in South America collecting orchids, his firm having booked quite a few large orders.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Cut Flower Exchange will be held Saturday, December 1, in the Coogan building. It is proposed to increase the directorship to fifteen.

Frank Millang is again at his desk, his broken ankle healed and his natural force unabated.

The Geller Florists' Supply Co. has moved into the store at 110 and 112 West Twenty-sixth street, where there will be ample space for its increasing business. The ground floor and basement each are 45x90 feet, and height, light and facilities are all that can be desired. The location is ideal, close to the wholesale cut flower market and the Coogan building. The company has secured a long lease and is ready for business at the new stand.

James McManus reports orchids scarce and prices advancing. Out of town orders for Thanksgiving were large and from all the big cities.

William Jurgens, of Newport, was in the city Saturday.

The horse show is over. Less than ever its influence was noted. It was not like the old days, when violets were a necessary addenda to the costumes and diamonds.

Reed & Keller report a big demand for their cycas leaf holders from every part of the country. The shipments of novelties for the Thanksgiving trade were beyond their expectations.

The electric light service of Hicks & Crawbuck, Brooklyn, was put out of commission and caused a fire alarm one evening last week, but no serious blaze resulted. The wholesalers of Brooklyn report a light demand for violets. General trade, however, is excellent, and all the retailers seem to be busy and prosperous.

A. J. Guttman attended the banquet of the Utica Florists' Club last week and speaks enthusiastically of its hospitality.

The New York Florists' Club will hold its final session for the year Monday evening, December 10, at the Grand opera

Christmas day. It looks as if the mums would break all records this year, in quantity, quality and length of season. They still are coming in wagon-loads and the hungry horses on Twenty-eighth street watch for them and, like the Chinese, feed on them. Since the Chinese minister at Washington suggested the excellence of the mum for salads there has been no further worry as to the surplus, for they say the orientals here take left-over stock and eat it. Frank Traendly says "it tastes all right," and so the danger of overproduction is settled for all time. By next year we will all be eating them, especially vegetarians.

agingly in his new wholesale plant store on West Thirtieth street.

The railroad that brings violets from up the Hudson has vetoed the Sunday shipments. This will inconvenience some of the big retailers, and in consequence this sudden fit of corporation orthodoxy is very unpopular.

Holly is here for Thanksgiving, but the quantity is limited. The Kervan Co. has been delivering and shipping some fine boxes of it, well berried, for several days.

The Pierson U-Bar Co. has received the contract for the new Central park greenhouses and will begin building immediately. Thousands of people who never saw a U-bar house will become familiar with them when this range is up.

Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, N. J., grows every year in importance as a horticultural center. The great greenhouse building works of Hitchings & Co., are fast approaching completion, and these, in addition to nursery interests, will make it more and more "a household word."

Hiram T. Jones has here over 100 acres under cultivation devoted almost exclusively to ornamentals, twenty-five acres of this in evergreens. Shrubs and deciduous trees cover the balance of the nursery. Immense importations of boxwood were made this year, the first of the four consignments filling five cars. Mr. Jones spends two months every year with his family in the Maine woods, "far from the madding crowd" and beyond telephone or mail, a lesson in recuperation of which all horticulturists in every line might well take heed. The nursery itself is close to the city and in the line of developing values, while the twelve acres where the home, trial-grounds and office are situated are within the city limits, and here property has quadrupled in value in the last five years.

Within a stone's throw are the greenhouses and home grounds of the Elizabeth Nursery Co., of which E. Runyan is manager. Here about ten acres are covered with the finest ornamentals, twenty greenhouses 25x125 and a splendid office with all conveniences. Four hundred acres of leased ground are utilized in the vicinity by this firm, and every department of the nursery business has received its share of attention. The greenhouse plant is devoted almost entirely to pot roses and herbaceous stock. Of the latter the ambition is a complete collection. In pot roses last year over 700,000 out of

The club meeting, Thursday, November 22, was well attended. After the regular business was out of the way a general discussion of the carnations shown followed. George Bayer brought down a few Prosperity cut from plants that were potted up to fill empty places in the benches. The flowers were fine, in fact better than those cut from the benches, which kept up quite a discussion for a while. E. A. Kuhnke, besides showing a lot of Boston, Piersoni and Scottii ferns and Asparagus plumosus in 5-inch pots and stevia in 7-inch pots, cyclamen in 6-inch pots, brought down a few seedling carnations that took well with the members present. G. W. Haebich, florist at the State Hospital, showed a fine bunch of seedlings as well as well-grown Enchantress and Lawson. Among the seedlings a white took everybody's eye. A dark crimson seedling of Harlowarden looked much like the parent, but is said to be a more free bloomer.

Krueger Bros. brought a couple of 8-inch cyclamens that were fine.

A. L. Griffin has started a new flower store at 901 Jefferson avenue. Most of the stock comes from the greenhouses of Arlin & Arlin, at Clyde, O. He reports business as being away ahead of expectations.

Thomas Magee, of Scottwood, has an elegant lot of Gloire de Lorraine begonias.

Carnations are scarce, but about the end of January the supply will be all right. E. A. K.

Springfield, Ill.—W. T. Buckley states that he has purchased the interest of H. M. Buckley in the W. T. Buckley Co. and will hereafter conduct the business alone.

LETTUCE.

The damp-rot has lately appeared in our lettuce. Any advice you can give regarding the treatment of the disease, also treatment of the soil to prevent the spreading of the disease, will be appreciated. G. R. C.

The only thing you can do to check the disease is to lower your temperature a little and keep the atmosphere of your house as dry as possible, but if damp-rot has much of a hold I am doubtful if you can ever bring your plants back to a fairly healthy condition. This disease is one of the most vexing problems that confronts the lettuce grower, and is brought on by some unsuitable condition for which it is often hard to account. Several causes may contribute toward the development of the disease. Constant vigilance is the price of good lettuce, so the grower's energies should be directed toward the prevention of the trouble by keeping the conditions as suitable for the crop as possible.

Lettuce does not take kindly to artificial conditions, such as must prevail to a greater or less extent under greenhouse treatment. It will stand so much, but no more. In all my experience I have never found a case of damp-rot on lettuce grown in coldframes, with average care. This goes to show that the conditions prevailing in the coldframe are quite congenial to its welfare, and in growing it in the greenhouse it is a safe guide to copy the coldframe conditions as nearly as possible; here there is usually abundance of natural moisture, but this does not seem to do them any harm in the absence of artificial heat. In the greenhouse the artificial heat dries up the natural moisture, but causes an unnatural condensation. In this condensation, it is my opinion, lies the root of the trouble. From this, then, we can readily conclude that the less artificial heat we use the less condensation we are likely to have, besides preserving more of the natural moisture.

I have found from experience that lettuce cannot be forced. It must come along by easy stages, and it pays to wait a little longer for a good crop and make ample allowance for the time it will take, rather than start a little late and try to rush them in for a certain date. For just as sure as the grower begins to try and push things, damp-rot or some other such disease will put in its appearance and not only check the growth of the plants, but cause endless trouble.

W. S. CROYDON.

Lettuce Houses of M. M. Miesse, Lancaster, Ohio.

AN OHIO GROWER.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken at White Post Farm, Lancaster, O., the establishment of M. M. Miesse, who is known far and wide for his success in the growing of lettuce, melons and tomatoes. One of the pictures shows a general view of the homestead and greenhouses, with a glimpse of the farm lands surrounding. The houses are seven 15x200, the even short-span construction, with one house 47x200 and a lean-to with the long slope to the south. The principal crop is lettuce and at present it is looking fine. Cutting was begun the last of October and for Thanksgiving there were several tons ready. The beds are constantly occupied by 70,000 plants.

As in almost all lettuce establishments, solid beds are used, the lettuce planted eight inches apart each way, and there always are 70,000 young plants coming along to take the place of those which are marketed. When Mr. Miesse cuts out a bed the soil is at once worked up and reset with good, strong transplanted plants. His aim is to get three crops.

In March he plants his last crop of lettuce, following it with tomato plants twenty-four inches apart one way and thirty-two inches the other, the space between being filled with lettuce, which is matured by the time the tomatoes require training. Good, strong transplanted tomato plants are used, trained to one stem. He cuts his first ripe tomatoes early in June and usually has the market to himself for about six weeks. He sells to the local growers at 15 cents a quart, wholesale, and never has found it necessarp to ask a customer how many he

WITTBOLD WATERING SYSTEM

AS THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS WILL SHOW:

"Some time ago we put in 100 feet of your system on trial and it has given perfect satisfaction. Send 500 feet more at once and we shall want 1800 feet additional as soon as our new houses are ready. We think the system a very good thing and consider the labor saved will pay for the apparatus in one season."
DAVIS BROS., Morrison, Ill.

"We wish to have our entire range fitted up with your watering system. We are much pleased with the working of the section which we have in at present and are perfectly satisfied that the time will be very short till all up-to-date growers will use the Wittbold system instead of the present method of watering with the hose. When the nozzles are properly spaced, they throw exactly the same amount of water to all parts of the bench."
W. B. DAVIS & CO., Cucumber Growers, Aurora, Ill.

"It is a fine thing and I wonder why greenhouse men have not taken hold more. It should come into general use. It puts the water on more evenly than the average man will with the hose."
STEPHEN HYDE, Vegetable Grower, Carthage, Mo.

"We have your system in one of our Ficus houses; it is working fine and is doing as much as ten men would do in the old way in the same time. We like it so well that as soon as we can arrange for water supply we shall equip our whole place."
A. C. OELSCHIG & SON, Savannah, Ga.

"We have the Wittbold system in six houses 38x200 and it works to perfection, doing the watering better than the average man can do with the hose. We will equip our other two plants next season; no more watering with the hose for us."
CHAMBERLIN & BUNKER, Vegetable Growers, Fremont, Mich.

"It is the King of Sprinklers; beats everything in the watering line."
J. B. ADAMS, Pass Christian, Miss.

"We are better pleased every day. A boy can do better work with it than a good man can with a hose. It is the only way to water lettuce."
R. T. DONNELL, Springfield, Ill.

"As a time-saver, in my estimation there is nothing to equal it and no one realizing its value will be without the Wittbold system."
WM. EDLEFSEN, Milwaukee, Wis.

"Your system in our Rose house works so well we want to equip five more houses. The labor and hose saved will in a short time pay for the system."
KLEHM'S NURSERIES, Arlington Heights, Ill.

"It won't be long before it will be universally used."
ALOIS FREY, Head Gardener, Lincoln Park, Chicago.

"The Wittbold system is a great success with us, a great labor-saver and certain to be used all over the country in less than no time."
R. G. RAU, Florist and Supt. of Parks, St. Joseph, Mo.

EVERY GROWER WILL USE A WITTBOLD MACHINE as soon as he becomes familiar with the good work it does and saving it effects. Send $5.00 for a Swivel Wheel and twenty ⅛-inch Nozzles, which will be enough for 100 feet of system. It will be the best investment you ever made. JUST A MINUTE: that's how long it will take to water an entire house. Send today.

wanted any given day; the customer instead has opened the negotiations with the question, "How many do we get this morning?"

Mr. Miesse grows Success and Magnificent, two tomatoes which he originated and which have been distributed to the trade by Wm. Henry Maule, Philadélphia. He also grows French Marvel. These are all red varieties and very attractive when well grown. Mr. Miesse and a number of the Lancaster vegetable growers attended the S. A. F. convention at Dayton and while there saw no exhibit which so thoroughly interested them as Mr. Sim's display of Comet tomatoes. The result is that quite a number are trying it for next season.

Mr. Miesse grows Grand Rapids lettuce, "as near as we can get it," for he says it is a hard matter to get good seed. He states that he thinks it would be better to pay $5 per pound for really good seed than to take the ordinary stock as a gift.

In the illustration showing the interior view Mr. Miesse and his son stand in the foreground, on one of the cement walks which are in use throughout the establishment. The Skinner system of irrigation is in use for watering and Mr. Miesse says "It is just it." Vegetable growers no longer use the hose.

Thirty years ago Mr. and Mrs. Miesse started out in gardening on a one-horse Dandy wagon. Now they ride in a rubber-tired phaeton, which Mr. Miesse says does not jolt as the Dandy wagon did, and if progression continues at the rate of the last few years he soon will be taking his crop to town each morning in a forty horsepower automobile.

MECHANICAL WATERING.

In spite of the fact that the old-style gardener believes that it is as much the proper pressure of his finger at the end of the hose as it is the water that comes therefrom which is a benefit to the plants, still mechanical watering is rapidly becoming the popular means of supplying moisture in establishments of modern size.

There are many arguments for the mechanical system of watering. They have been discussed to such an extent that all over the country both progressive men and lazy have given the system a trial, with the result that the progressive ones usually have increased their use of it and been instrumental in its adoption by their neighbors. The lazy growers sometimes have found nothing in it, for as a usual thing wherever the mechanical watering has failed to give satisfaction it has been because of careless and imperfect installation.

The mechanical systems have taken especially strong hold among the vegetable growers. Hundreds of lettuce growers now use no hose in handling their crops and the warmest advocate of mechanical watering yet developed is the owner of a big range devoted to cucumbers. Growers of cut flowers have not yet taken up the system largely, but here and there a man who has tried it speaks in its favor, while the voices raised against the system are usually those who have had no experience with it.

At the establishment of the Henry A. Dreer Co., Riverton, N. J., several systems of mechanical watering are to be seen in operation, and are among the most interesting features as viewed by the many visitors. The Dreer Co. has the piping not only in the fields but in frames.

The southern truckers are using the lines of sprinklers for another purpose. They have found that they can ward off impending frosts by the use of the sprinkling system. Where fields of vegetables not equipped with the sprinkler have been completely ruined by frosts, those in which the sprinkler was kept running have escaped all harm. As one southern trucker says, the systems are likely to revolutionize the trucking business in the south.

Comet Tomato

Those who force tomatoes should give "Comet" a trial. This variety has been the talk of gardeners around Boston the past season. Those who have seen it growing declare there's nothing to compare with it. Seed, $5.00 per oz.

WILLIAM SIM, Cliftondale, Mass.

STERLING, ILL.—The new greenhouse of the Sterling Floral Co. has been completed and is now being used for growing carnations. It is 25x125 and modern in construction. The company has a fine display of carnations and chrysanthemums.

BRIGHTON, MASS.—The greenhouses located at the corner of Spring and Green streets have been sold, together with 29,800 feet of land. The total assessed value is $7,000; on the land, $4,500. Henry B. Goodenough is the grantor to Antonio Deluco.

The Skinner System of Irrigation

IS USED AROUND THE WORLD

"I have fitted one house with the Skinner System and am delighted with it—just what has been wanted."

CHAS. F. STREET, Clackamas, Oregon.

"The nozzles work like a charm. Send me 10,000 more. I want to equip my whole place with Skinner nozzles."

D. N. CHADWICK, Wilmington, N. C.

"I have used your irrigation system the past season on one acre of Cauliflower for seed and, as it has worked to my full satisfaction in every respect, I want to use it next season all over my farm and will send you my order shortly, as several friends also want to use it."

A. HANSEN,
Copenhagen, Denmark.

The above illustration is from a kodak photo showing a partial view of a 6-acre irrigation plant at Leesburg, Fla. In the house in the center is located a 6 h. p. gasoline engine and a Skinner centrifugal pump, which is drawing the water 675 feet from the lake with a 10-foot lift and is furnishing 900 Skinner nozzles with 30 pounds pressure at one time.

The leading growers in Florida now believe the Skinner System will revolutionize the trucking business in the state, as with it they can not only irrigate their crops, but can also frost protect as well.

That the Skinner System has been a success in the greenhouses is shown by the fact that in one place, Toledo, Ohio, twelve growers have installed it. Some of the largest growers in the state have, after giving the system a trial, put it in their whole place. The Skinner System has won its way on its own merits. Every installation always brings others from that section.

The Skinner System can be installed during the winter when there is plenty of time, and in the spring when rushed with outside work you will not have to stop to water the greenhouses.

Let me refer you to some one in your section that is using my system.

IT is said that vine seeds grown in 1906 are plumper and show a better color than the crops of 1905 or 1904.

THE sources of supply for onion seed are pretty well drawn from and it appears that there are still quite a few places that are in need of more seed.

SOME of the foreign shipments are longer delayed this year than usual. The season has been against quick harvesting and cleaning on the other side, is the reason given.

THERE is a demand for experienced seed clerks. A contemplated branching out at one or two places recently has added to the earning capacity of clerks who know their business.

THE first of the wholesale price lists to come to hand is Burpee's, dated November 22. It is interesting to note that price changes, as compared with last year, are few and nearly all that are changed are lower, except on onion and radish.

PRICES for 1907 of onion seed and other Pacific coast crops are to be much higher than they have been, and it is understood that the terms are to be on a sixty days' basis, instead of June 1, as formerly.

JAMES W. BEGBIE has established himself at Shreveport, La., carrying a general line of seeds, bulbs, plants, etc.

THE onion seed thus far received of the 1906 crop is reported to test well. This is one feature of the situation that is gratifying.

THOSE who are able to quote Alaska peas freely did not care whether turkey for Thanksgiving was 28 or 38 cents a pound.

ALL seedsmen say that the margin of profit they are able to get for their goods is not sufficient. Who is at fault for this, and why isn't something done to help matters?

ONION SEED PRICES.

It looks as though onion seed at retail will be priced about as follows:

Red Wethersfield	$1.50 to $1.75
Flat Danvers	1.50
Globe Danvers	2.00
Southport Yellow Globe	2.50
Southport Red Globe	2.50
Southport White Globe	3.00
White Portugal	2.50

Special strains of the Globe sorts are scarce, and these are likely to go as high as $3 for the red and yellow, and more for the white.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending November 24 were as follows:

It will be noted that many of the above were combined shipments consigned to custom-house brokers for distribution.

BURRELL'S GEM MELON.

The Burrell Gem is a combination of the characteristics of the following varieties: Osage, Defender, Rocky Ford and Acme, and more particularly the Defender and Acme. It is the result of my personal efforts to produce an ideal market melon. Such a melon requires the development of many vital points. It has a tough, thin rind, well arched ribs covered with a closely laced and interlaced gray netting. The blossom end is protected with a well developed button. Shape, quite elongated, the diameter from stem to blossom being one-third more than from top to bottom. Meat, of a reddish orange, very thick, fine grained and spicy, not containing too much water or acid. Seed cavity, small and triangular, the seed closely held in place in three lobes. This is one of the first points to consider in a shipping melon, as, if the fibrous growth containing the seeds is not well developed, the seeds soon shake loose and the melon as quickly begins to decay.

The average weight is about two and one-quarter pounds, the length six inches, and the thickness four and one-half inches. The standard crate is fourteen inches wide, four and one-half inches deep and twenty-four inches long, holding twelve melons. About eighty per cent of the crop crates nicely in the above sized crate. D. V. Burrell.

the year was about 7,000,000. There has been no change in this number during the past five years.''

Seed Adulteration.

As to the publication of the names of sellers of adulterated grass seeds, he says, under the head, ''Good Seeds for the Farmer'':

''Several lines of work carried on during the year have for their object the improvement of the seed upon which the farmer must depend for his crops. The investigations of seed adulterations previously mentioned in these reports have been continued, and there is every evidence that the publication of the names of firms found to be selling adulterated seed has been the means of checking the evil. In all this work the department has but one object, namely, to protect the farmer from unscrupulous dealers who make a practice of foisting bad seed upon him. The rank and file of American seedsmen do not follow any such practices and are as anxious as the department to protect the farmer.

''The seed laboratory has tested for both seedsmen and farmers hundreds of samples of seeds during the last year, and in this way has greatly encouraged the propaganda for good seed. A feature of the work has been a campaign of education for better seed. Cheap seed is often the most expensive thing connected with a crop. A few cents saved on each pound of alfalfa or clover seed may cost the farmer all of his work in preparing and fertilizing the ground, besides the loss of an entire season in getting the crop started. The bureau has also been actively engaged in encouraging the good-seed work through addresses at farmers' institutes and other meetings.''

Corn Breeding.

Under the head, ''Better Grades of Seed Corn,'' Mr. Wilson says:

''Special work has been done during the year in demonstrating the great importance of high-grade seed corn. The work was inaugurated to establish the great value of proper care of the ordinary seed as grown by the farmer. The main point at issue was the gain in yield due to the vitality of the seed. Actual field demonstrations have shown that, taking corn in the average—that is, corn from different parts of the United States as ordinarily saved for seed by farmers—the yield would be increased about fifteen per cent if the vitality were perfect. The department has pointed out simple methods of testing vitality that any farmer can follow, and has shown in field practice that the adoption of such methods by the farmer may increase his yield from ten to fifteen per cent. Similar work has been conducted with a number of other crops.

''In the corn breeding experiments great advances have been made. One variety, which has been carefully bred in central Ohio, has, for the last four years, shown an average yearly gain of ten bushels per acre over the original variety. Seed of this variety has been sent to numerous farmers and is giving excellent results. The breeding work with sweet corn, having as its object the improvement of strains for canning purposes, has been continued with good success. It has been demonstrated that an excellent quality of sweet corn seed can be grown, and that with good care it will germinate much better and produce a better crop than such seed as is customarily purchased by canning companies.''

New Plants.

In chronicling the achievements of the department in the introduction of new plants, the secretary says:

''One of the most important achievements is the recent discovery of Prof. N. E. Hansen, of the South Dakota Agricultural Experiment Station, who is now abroad in the interest of the department, of the existence of a Siberian alfalfa, an excellent forage plant with yellow instead of the usual blue flowers. This plant is native on the dry steppes of Siberia, where the mercury sometimes freezes without snow, thus proving the ability of the plant to withstand with no protection a temperature of about 40 degrees below zero. The existence of this alfalfa has been suspected for many years, and its final discovery, it is beheved, may mark an epoch in the agriculture of the northwestern prairie regions of the United States, where the rainfall is slight and the winters are exceedingly cold. Prof. Hansen is making a careful study of this plant, with a view to its cultivation in this country. A quantity of the seed of this valuable crop has been secured, which will be given a thorough trial by the department at an early date. It will supplement durum wheat in a rotative system and avoid the necessity of summer fallowing.

"Wilt has nearly destroyed the watermelon industry in many sections of the south. All known varieties of melons have been tested, but none resistant to the disease was found. It was found, however, that the citron is resistant, and the department undertook by hybridization to breed this quality into the melon. The result has been successful, and there has been secured and fixed a variety of melon very resistant to wilt—a heavy yielder, of excellent quality, and well adapted to shipping. Next season it will be propagated for distribution."

Nitro Cultures.

As to the nitrogen fixing bacteria upon which the department has done so much work, it is stated that "The method of distributing cultures dried on cotton for the inoculation of leguminous crops was discontinued during the year, and in its place the plan adopted of distributing pure liquid cultures hermetically sealed in glass tubes. This has been proved to be a great improvement over the old system. It is planned to distribute during the current year larger cultures to the farmers, and thus render it possible to reduce the time formerly required to develop a rich culture for inoculating leguminous crops. Many field tests in this work are under way on large farms, and it is hoped by this careful experimental work to acquire much valuable information concerning the best manner of treatment of certain soils and crops in order to obtain successful inoculations."

NOTES FROM HOLLAND.

No doubt the most remarkable October in the last twenty years has just come to a close. With the exception of one cold day it has been a steady continuation of summer weather and it may truly be said that it has been an ideal month for all those who had to attend to any outside work. Nearly all bulb stocks have been planted and in many places the growers are busy in putting the winter covering on their fields. Perhaps the only drawback of the fine weather has been the dullness in the retail trade, as the absence of frost has failed to work as a reminder on the people that it is time to plant spring bulbs. Usually such a reminder in the shape of a sharp frost early in October, that destroys bedding flowers, is a great assistance to the retail trade and in consequence helps to clear out any surplus stock in the hands of the growers. Fortunately no surplus of hyacinths or crocus is to be disposed of this season, as they are all completely sold out here, and many late orders for them had to be left unfilled. Spiræas have moved slowly this season, but gladioli have been making up for this and especially Brenchleyensis in first size bulbs have been extremely scarce, as the crop turned out poor, and many orders could not be filled at any price. Only the early gladioli of the nanus type have proved a drug on the market, principally caused by their not being known. —Horticultural Trade Journal.

the following officers were elected: President, L. R. Erskine, of Highmore; vice-president, J. T. Morrow, of Mitchell; secretary and manager, W. A. Wheeler, of Brookings; treasurer, S. E. Morris, of Mitchell. The directors are L. R. Erskine, J. T. Morrow and I. W. Seaman.

The company has a limited capital of $100,000, of which $25,000 is paid up. Of this amount $10,000 is held by Mitchell business men and $15,000 is held by outside people.

The corporation will maintain an experiment and testing farm near Mitchell. The principal offices of the corporation will be located at Mitchell, where will be erected or purchased as soon as necessity demands warehouses and other buildings necessary for the operation of the business.

"One thing that will be of great advantage to the company," said Prof. Wheeler to a reporter, "will be the cooperation of the experiment station at Brookings and the leading grain firms of the state and Minnesota, who have assured the officials that they will do what they can to develop the company. The seeds will be grown under the supervision of the company, special attention being given to pure seed for the farm, while garden seeds will be taken up on the side. Farmers have come to place a much higher estimate on the use of pure seed and this company will give it to them in the best possible shape, for it will be acclimated even to the various sections of the state."

Prof. Wheeler will on March 1 assume charge of the affairs of the company. He is connected with the faculty of the state agricultural college at Brookings and has charge of the state experiment station at Highmore. Before coming to South Dakota Prof. Wheeler was associated with the Minnesota experiment station for ten years and has made pure seed a study throughout all these years. Last year he accompanied the seed special trains over the Milwaukee and the Northwestern roads and visited seventy-five towns in the state.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business last week was steady and everybody who was not working on orders occupied his spare time in making up designs for the holidays. Chrysanthemums are a glut, and the street fakers are standing along the curbing offering them at a figure that the retailers cannot meet. Roses are still lacking in their usual supply. Carnations are plentiful and there is just about enough demand to use them up. Violets are coming in more steadily and color and stems are favorable, and same are selling at 60 cents per hundred. Paper Whites are now on the market, but there is little demand. Greens of all kinds are plentiful.

Reports from the holly section indicate a fairly good cut will be made and that it will be well covered with berries. Mistletoe will find its way into the market in its usual amount. Christmas greens are beginning to come into the market.

Various Notes.

Bolgiano & Sons have awarded their contract to H. Quick for 10,000 geranium plants and 5,000 dahlia roots, to be delivered in the spring.

The Baltimore Transfer Co.'s wagon upset Harry Ekas' stall and damaged a number of plants.

The Baltimore Florists' Exchange will occupy its new building on Franklin and St. Paul streets this week. J. J. Perry is the manager.

B. Stoll, Brooklyn, Md., cleared out of two houses of carnations 20x160 feet $86 in one month's cutting.

Mrs. Emma Hahn, of Roland Park, is offering her business for sale.

Struntz Bros., of Westport, report that business has been steadily increasing and nearly all their stock was sold several days before Thanksgiving.

Griffith & Turner Co. and J. Bolgiano report that they have a general clean-up on bulbs. The first named was asked to furnish 40,000 tulips and was unable to do so.

Fire broke out on the morning of November 23 on the third floor of the establishment of S. L. Lamberd Co. Damage reported slight.

E. H. Holden, Catonsville, has some extra fine tomatoes in his greenhouses.

G. Cook has made his appearance in market again.

W. O. Stran & Co., of Waverly, have been in business one year and prospects are very encouraging. They have eight houses, six of which are 18x60 and two are 18x100. J. L. T.

Crookston, Minn.—The greenhouse belonging to J. F. Hetler and operated by Frank Zarracher collapsed, November 9, as a result of a heavy fall of snow. Though the loss was not total, property to the value of $1,400 was destroyed. Mr. Hetler will rebuild.

CYCLAMEN PERS. GIGANTEUM

Extra Fine Plants, in bud and bloom, large-flowering, 3-inch, ready to shift, $5.00 per 100; 4-in., $10.00; 5-in., well budded for Christmas, $15.00. Primulas, Chinese and Obconica, 3-in., $3.00; 4-in., in bud and bloom, $6.00.

Asparagus Plumosus Nanus, 3½-in., $8.00 per 100.

Cinerarias, 3-in., $3.00 per 100.

...THE...

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

TORONTO.

Trade during the last week was anything but satisfactory. Quantities of stock are coming and the demand is not at all equal to the supply, with the exception of American Beauties and violets which are still scarce. Roses and carnations are now of first quality, large mums are received in good supply but do not seem to move with the rush that they have in other years. It would appear that there have been too many growing this season, and the stores have been kept so fully supplied with all colors and all sizes that people are getting tired of them. Poinsettias are arriving. J. H. Dunlop has a fine window of them this week. S. Tidy & Son had the Mulock dance this week, which was a very elaborate affair, using quantities of southern smilax, orchids, Beauties and Jones mums.

We are glad to report that William Jay, Jr., who sustained a fractured skull a few weeks ago, is steadily improving and the doctor has allowed him to be up a short time each day this week.

J. S. Simmons was honored by being elected Master of Wilson Masonic lodge this week. D. J.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Roses, carnations and mums have never been so fine as during this fall and the supply is about equal to the demand. At the many social events one sees flowers on every hand, and even at a small card party the hostess seems compelled to adorn her home with greenhouse products.

The store of W. M. Lindsay is greatly improved by the addition of a balcony, where all the office work is transacted, thus making considerable space in the store.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE Queen City Nursery Co., Sioux City, Ia., has been incorporated.

YOUNGERS & Co., Geneva, Neb., report an exceptionally busy shipping season, orders running larger than usual.

THE Southwestern Iowa Horticutural Society meets at Omaha December 5 to 7. W. M. Bomberger, of Harlan, is secretary.

THE nurserymen of Utah had a meeting at Salt Lake City November 26 for the purpose of getting into closer touch, each with the others.

THERE were 845 persons employed in the sixty state experiment stations last year. The funds devoted to the work totaled $1,525,489.18.

THE program for the annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Association of Nurserymen will be found on the Pacific coast page of this issue.

THE city council at East Washington, Pa., has passed an ordinance imposing a fine of $20 per tree for planting Carolina poplars and water maples on the public ways.

THE proprietors of the Barton Creek nurseries, Charlotte, Tenn., have purchased the farm adjacent to the nursery property and will make extensive additions and improvements.

THE West Michigan Nursery, Benton Harbor, Mich., has cleared the apple trees from the W. H. Graham property at Berrien Springs, which it held under lease, as the property is to be divided into building lots.

THE latest San Jose scale bulletin is from the Texas State Experiment Station and is prompted, the author states, by the rapid growth of the fruit industry in Texas and the frequency of requests for information as to how to fight the pest.

THE Kansas Home Nursery, owned and operated by A. H. Griesa, at Lawrence, Kan., since 1867, has had a busy autumn season. Mr. Griesa covers Kansas and Oklahoma with about forty agents. His uniform success indicates his comprehension of the field.

AT the annual convention of the National Grange, at Denver November 22, a resolution was presented asking for a national law to protect farmers against the sale of nursery stock not true to name, but failed of adoption, being referred to the various state granges.

U. P. HEDRICK, of the Western New York Experiment Station, gives the acreage of grapes in the state as follows: Chautauqua county district, 30,000 acres; Keuka Lake, 15,000; Canandaigua Lake, 5,000; Seneca Lake, 4,000; Hudson valley, 2,000; Cayuga Lake, 1,000; Romulus, 1,000.

WAYNE & BUTLER, who two weeks ago sold their nursery, east of Sac City, Ia., to A. N. Wyman, are to leave Sac City with their families. Mr. Wayne recently established a nursery at Elk Point, S. D., which he will manage. Mr. Butler will move after the holidays to Guthrie, Okla., where he purchased a farm. A considerable part of the Wayne & Butler nursery stock was sold to the nursery firm of J. S. Griffin & Sons.

JOHN WATSON, of Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, N. Y., advises that he has placed in the hands of an attorney for proper action a newspaper report from Salt Lake City connecting his name with the affairs of the Pioneer Nursery Co. Mr. Watson feels that his reputation has been injured by the reports from Salt Lake and the REVIEW takes pleasure in setting him right with the trade.

AMOOR RIVER PRIVET.

Will you please tell us the best way to root Amoor river privet cuttings in the open ground? We have no hothouse, but have frost-proof cellars. In these we have been putting our cuttings in early spring that they may callus before planting in the ground. But we sometimes lose many of them, and, as we have only our experience along this line for a few years, we thought perhaps you might tell us a better way, as this method is much trouble and so far has not been very successful. We shall be pleased to have you give us some light along this line, as we think there is a better way to do this work. G. W. J.

Soft-wooded cuttings of Ligustrum Amurense root freely under glass. Seeing your correspondent, however, has no greenhouse, it would be best for him to take off cuttings late in the fall, tie them in bundles and bury them in the ground, transplanting as early in the spring as possible and firming the cuttings well. Allow only a small part to show above ground. This method is preferable to heeling them in a frost-proof cellar, where the soil may be too dry for the cuttings. W. N. C.

CONTROL OF INSECT PESTS.

In the annual report of the secretary of agriculture, made public today, the following paragraphs are found under the discussion of work for the control of insect pests:

"It has been shown that it is an easy matter to bring to this country the European parasites of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, simply by collecting numbers of the larvæ and chrysalides in different parts of Europe and sending them direct to Boston. A certain percentage of these insects on arrival in New England have given out the European parasites, which have either been cultivated in wire-gauze inclosures, with plenty of food, or have been liberated in the open, there being chosen for this purpose patches of woods not subject to forest fires or to remedial work against the insects. It has been ascertained further—and this as a fact hitherto unknown even to European entomologists—that the young larvæ of the brown-tail moth in their overwintering nests in Europe are extensively parasitized. Therefore, during the winter of 1905-6 over 117,000 nests of the brown-tail moth were collected in thirty-three different localities in Europe, ranging between North Germany, South Hungary and West Brittany, and comprising a large range of varying elevations and climatic conditions. More than 70,000 parasites were reared from these nests on American soil. About eight per cent of these were hyperparasites; that is, parasites upon parasites.

"By means of specially constructed cages the hyperparasites were separated and destroyed. The primary parasites were placed in out-of-door cages or liberated in the open. The largest colonies included 10,000, 15,000 and 25,000 parasites, respectively. Owing to the very wet season a fungous disease prevailed among the caterpillars, vitiating to some extent the results of the experiments, but nevertheless three species of parasites were seen to lay their eggs in American-born caterpillars, and there is positive proof of the development on American soil of at least one complete generation of two of the European species. It has been shown that they may breed successfully through the season.

"For the investigation of insect enemies of deciduous fruit trees field stations at Youngstown, N. Y., and Fort Valley, Ga., were carried on to the close of the growing season of 1905, and in the spring of 1906 others were started at Myrtle, Ga., and North East, Pa. Later another one was established at Nebraska City, Neb. In the course of this work some studies have been made of the parasites of the San Jose scale, and experiments have been made with a number of insecticide mixtures. The chemical study of the lime-sulphur and other washes has been undertaken in co-operation with the bureau of chemistry. New studies have been made of the plum curculio. The peach borer has also been studied throughout its geographic range, and extensive demonstration work has been done in Nebraska on remedies for the codling moth, in co-operation with the bureau of plant industry, which at the same time was dealing with the apple scab, combination treatments for both being carried on co-operatively. Co-operation in this work is also under way with the several other experiment stations and the Georgia State entomologist."

ALAMEDA, CAL.

Alleging that the fumes from the pottery works of N. Clark & Son in West Alameda ruin his plants, F. W. Vowinckel, an Alameda nurseryman, whose property is in the vicinity of the pottery works, has begun suit for injunction and $5,000 damages. If he wins his case and secures a permanent injunction, it will close a plant worth approximately $1,000,000, which has been running in Alameda for about a quarter of a century. No buildings are very close to it, but it is surrounded by vegetable gardens and the nursery of Vowinckel.

In his complaint Vowinckel charges that the company has for some time been manufacturing sewer pipe, and has been burning crude oil and other fuel in its furnaces in such a negligent manner that the smoke, soot and gases emitted destroy vegetation within a considerable radius, among the properties affected being that of the plaintiff.

This is the second suit of the kind to be instituted by plant growers in Alameda. Some years ago vegetable gardeners of the west end won a damage and injunction suit against the Pine Smelter, and the plant was closed and moved away.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had a series of dry winds for the last few days and are greatly in need of a few showers. The lack of sunshine has had a tendency to make flowers scarce, and the growers will take advantage of that fact, and a general raise of prices can be expected. The outside mums are holding out splendidly, the weather having been favorable for them thus far. The growers are charging the retailers from $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred and there will be no surplus. Violets are in fair supply, although the weather is not favorable. The stores have been paying a uniform price of $1 per dozen bunches to the wholesalers. There is no change in the quality or price of roses and there is plenty of stock, especially of the short stemmed. Good Beauties are scarce, and as for fancy stock, there is none at present being offered. Valley and Romans are in short supply. Many growers have done nothing in the line of flowering bulbs this season, and there is bound to be a shortage of such stock for the holidays. Smilax is in good supply, but maidenhair and asparagus show a tendency to be scarce. Business is fair in the general lines, and funeral trade has been good for several weeks. The general opinion about Thanksgiving seems to be that we will have plenty of trade for everybody.

Various Notes.

A visit to the orchid houses of J. C. Siegfried, in Alameda, shows a lot of the best commercial varieties in splendid condition. A heavy demand is reported, with many orders for Thanksgiving.

At the nurseries of M. Lynch, at Menlo Park, much activity in shipping is evident. This firm sells but little of their large output in San Francisco, the majority of everything grown being expressed to interior and northern cities. An immense house full of smilax is being held for the holidays.

Thorsted & Co., of Fruitvale, are exhibiting a new seedling white carnation. It is the size and shape of Wolcott, but does not burst and is sweet scented. Another season's trial will be given it before extensive propagation will be carried on.

The city of Oakland will hire half a dozen additional gardeners for the various plazas. Ninety dollars per month are the wages paid in this department.

Charles Beebe, late of Trumbull & Beebe, is at present connected with the relief bureau, which was organized to aid the victims of the late earthquake and fire.

The Boland Floral Co. has established itself in a creditable manner on Geary street. It is the first florist to come down town since the fire.

J. D. Marion has departed on a two weeks' trip to southern California and Arizona. G.

HEELING IN.

Much valuable deciduous stock is lost every season by the ordinary dealer from carelessness in heeling in and the subsequent lack of attention. I have spoken especially of hardy deciduous trees and shrubs, as they are handled almost entirely during the winter and early spring and usually without any soil on the roots. To begin with, it is not a sensible idea to attempt to dig anything in the line of deciduous stock before it is perfectly dormant, or as near so as it gets in this climate. The old rule was to wait until we had a couple of sharp frosts, but as they do not always appear in California, I find it is a better plan to wait until we have sufficient rain to wet the earth to a depth of from eight inches to a foot. Sometimes this fails us, and, although it is usually not a profitable proceeding to attempt to handle stock with a pick and shovel, it is occasionally necessary to do so. But little is to be gained by the purchaser or the grower by this method, and the injury to the smaller roots should be a matter of concern. Customers, however, do not always use judgment and the nurseryman often has to transplant stock much against his will.

When the proper time has arrived for transplanting, it should be done without any unnecessary uncovering or delay until it is replanted. Care should be taken to pack the soil firmly around the stock so that it will not act as a sponge and the trench as a basin in which the roots get too much moisture, with the result that if it is too long continued they generally commence to decay. The top may not show the effect of this for months, or long after they have been sold and planted in some other part of the country. This is especially noticeable in trees that do not require an excess of moisture even when growing.

Another fact often noticed, especially in packing grounds, is the careless manner in which stock is pulled out of the ground, with the result that there are always a few trees left each time with exposed roots, which the attendant never has time to cover. If the weather is frosty, with drying winds, both of which are very common in California, the roots and tops suffer greatly, and I have seen hundreds of fine looking stock sent out and every one of them long past recovery.

The habit of heeling in trees in bundles has much to do with this state of affairs. The dealer usually ties his trees in bunches of ten trees each and plants them in rows. If the roots are large the three or four trees forming the center of the package are rarely sufficiently covered to keep out the air, and unless the soil is well sifted among the roots when they are planted in this way they invariably die out or get such a setback that they never fully recover.

Another mistake is to heel in stock in a situation where a considerable quantity of water will stand during the season. The dug row in which the trees are standing usually acts as a trough and collects all the moisture in the neighborhood. This does not apply so particularly to sandy soil as it does to heavier soil.

Trees should not be left in the trench till they are well out in leaf before transplanting. If for any reason it is desired to keep them without permanently replanting, they can be shifted every few weeks, and in this way kept partially dormant for a couple of months without much injury. G.

SPOKANE, WASH.

State of Business.

With the first fall of snow the winter season seems fully started and few windows display anything but the king of the early winter—the chrysanthemum. Each firm has to be content with a small show of its own, and reading in the trade paper of the combined efforts of our friends in the east to produce the splendid exhibitions of last week.

Those who handle stock grown in the coast cities have had their patience severely tried by the flood that has visited the western portion of our state, washing out our railroads, thus causing a suspension of all transcontinental traffic for the last eight days. But at this writing we can look for a regular schedule, as those roads severely damaged will bring in their trains over other roads. This disaster has interfered more seriously with the violet trade than with any other part of the business, as the eastern section of the state does not produce this necessary article.

Various Notes.

Sanders is handling some choice roses and reports a large amount of funeral work.

Armstrong & Wright have an attractive display of white and yellow mums and used a quantity in decorating for the Dickson-Dennis wedding.

The Spokane Florist Co. is fully established in its new quarters and has recently added a basement store room. The company had a large decoration at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, last week for a banquet, tendered the Masons at the Hotel Idaho.

Hoyt Bros. are to be congratulated that they did not suffer a serious loss by the disastrous fire, which occurred next door to them. KENNEDY.

DOMOTO OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The following story of one of San Francisco's largest growers comes from Pueblo, Colo.:

"M. Domoto, one of the wealthiest Japanese merchants in San Francisco, November 17 visited Charles Koike, leader of the Japanese colony in Pueblo. Domoto is the proprietor of an immense greenhouse establishment in San Francisco and has made a large fortune out of the business.

"He landed in the Golden Gate city fifteen years ago and opened a small flower store, making the chrysanthemum his specialty. He recently erected a large building which is the headquarters for football players during the season. He is known as an authority on the game and is always in attendance at the larger contests. When jiu jitsu was first spoken of in this country Domoto demonstrated its usefulness by putting down the center rush of one of the heaviest teams around the bay. Domoto and Koike were intimate friends in Japan and while making a business trip to Salt Lake the former took occasion to come to Pueblo to visit his friend."

THE REVIEW is the pusher.—J. G. ANGEL, Neosho, Mo.

RHINEBECK'S VIOLETS.

The following is by Samuel J. Thompson, of West Chester, Pa., who recently paid a visit among relatives at Rhinebeck, N. Y.:

"The extension of the violet business is marvelous. Fifteen years ago there were three violet growers in Rhinebeck, and a thousand or so square feet of glass covered their plants. The superiority of their product created a growing demand and today there are ninety-two owners of violet houses, who care for nearly 500,000 square feet of glass under which are 800,000 plants producing 35,000,000 flowers annually, at an income of $175,000 for an average season's production.

"In the 340 violet houses of that section more than 300 people are employed, except during the summer, when the young plants require little attention. The average houses are about 24x150 feet, and in each house about 6,000 plants are grown. The average plant yields fifty flowers and good stock averages net to the grower 50 cents per hundred. The first picking is made in September, and the season usually ends in the following April. The Rhinebeck violets are superior to others, because they are larger, have longer stems, a better color, and a more lasting fragrance. Shipments are made largely to New York city, Chicago, Buffalo and some to Philadelphia, Detroit and Washington.

"The soil in that vicinity seems to be just right for the needs of the violets, and the industry seems to be permanently established, with benefit to the community."

ELBERON, N. J.

A meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society was held November 19, President Robertson in the chair. There was a large attendance. Two new members were elected. A number of questions out of the question box tending to the betterment and progress of the society were discussed.

W. D. Robertson was awarded the gold medal presented by George Steele, of the Shrewsbury Nurseries, for the member scoring the highest number of points during the year for exhibits at the regular meetings.

A number of beautiful exhibits were staged. W. D. Robertson was awarded a certificate of merit for a magnificent specimen of Microlepia hirta cristata. A. Bauer showed a good vase of Carnation Victory. J. Kennedy exhibited some hardy chrysanthemums which were much admired, while F. Dettlinger had some nice vegetables. G. M.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market has been rather quiet. Stock is plentiful. Mums are moving slower than last week. Roses are quite plentiful, both pink and white. American Beauties are not so abundant and prices are high. Chrysanthemums are being used for funeral bouquets, mostly pink and white, although a few yellow have been seen. Violets are scarce and high. The weather has been bad the last week. It has been sleeting and snowing all week. This had quite an effect on business.

Various Notes.

R. J. Turner, of Independence, Mo., was in this city this week. He is looking up material to build a large greenhouse for forcing lettuce. Mr. Turner deals in ice in summer and is now to grow lettuce to sell in winter.

A. F. Barbe is cutting some fine mums. He grows Ivory to perfection. Few florists in this city can grow Ivory to any size. Mr. Barbe furnished one of the Walnut street stores 1,000 mums in one day last week. He is also cutting some fine Brides and Maids, and finds a ready sale for such stock. Mr. Barbe does a large Sunday business for the cemetery and has no opposition there.

R. S. Brown & Son were almost swamped with funeral work this week.

Mr. Fruedenthal reports business to have been quiet last week.

Mr. Broman, of Independence, did not sell his greenhouses, as has been stated.

Mr. Thornhill, at Rosedale, is about to shut down his greenhouses on account of no water at hand. He grows mostly lettuce and geraniums. As we have a deep snow, it will help out some, but it is rather uphill work to those who have to haul water.

The Alpha Floral Co. will move December 8 to 1105 Walnut street, where it will have quite a large place, with fine show windows. The old place was too small to accommodate the business done.

W. H. H.

Lancaster, O.—W. E. Gravett conducted a chrysanthemum show and sale, November 17, at Hickel's drygoods store.

Henderson, Ky.—J. C. Hoffman reports business to be good, especially in design work. Carnations and mums are in good demand.

Galena, Ill.—B. F. Vandervate conducted a flower show November 15 to 17 in the Caille building. The flowers on exhibition were of excellent quality and the show was well attended.

The Market.

Chrysanthemums continue to monopolize attention. The local cut is now at its best and a few fine blooms are being received from out-of-town growers. Of the inferior grades there is a great supply and it does not take much money to get some kind of a flower. This does not mean that the bulk of the crop is inferior, but the inevitable culling leaves an accumulation of cheap flowers.

Various Notes.

A feature of the trade at present is a big lot of poinsettias being put on the market by A. B. Garden. They are long stems and better flowers than are usually seen at Christmas.

Z. D. Blackistone is receiving from the north shipments of a fine quality of the Enchantress carnation.

J. H. Small & Sons are handling fine blooms of several of the new varieties of carnations originated by Weber & Sons, of Oakland, Md.

The Thanksgiving trade is good. From now to the opening of congress is but a breathing spell. Then good-bye to the melancholy days.

Mr. Hanson, now in charge at F. H. Kramer's Anacostia range, is showing a disposition to push things.

A noteworthy feature on the fine grounds near Gude Bros.' range is a fine residence being erected for Adolphus Gude, the senior partner. A. F.

S. C. Briggs' place at Mount Pleasant is worth going to see. Mr. Briggs is a man who wants nothing but the best and his greenhouses show it in construction as well as productiveness. Here the new as well as the best standard varieties of carnations are grown to perfection and the roses are equally good. The American Beauties are fine and Killarney, Chatenay, Richmond, Wellesley, Safrano, Maid, Bride and Liberty are also grown. The palms and ferns are in a healthy condition and violets are coming into bloom. Mr. Briggs is an enthusiastic hybridizer and there are a lot of seedling roses and carnations, also geraniums, some of which look promising. Besides flowers, lettuce and tomatoes are grown. Carl Anderson is in charge and shows his ability in keeping the place in good order. X.

MARIETTA, O.—Charles Dudley, of Parkersburg, while in this city last week stated that he intends to have a chrysanthemum show with 10,000 blooms.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Judging by reports from several growers, the last week has been the mum week of the season, both for flowers and orders. All the retailers' windows were decorated with mums of all colors and sizes, and the market was simply glutted. No price could tempt a buyer. It is to be hoped that prices will take a decided rise on November 29, so that the day may be a real Thanksgiving for the trade.

Robert Ellis, with Bertermann Bros., has become a benedict, having married Miss Morgan, of Anderson. Miss Morgan was formerly with Stuart & Haugh.

R. A. McKeand, florist at the Soldiers' Home, Marion, was in the city last week shaking hands with his many friends.

A. F. J. Bauer and E. Larsen paid a visit to F. Dorner & Sons Co., La Fayette, and saw many interesting things among the carnations. The benches of White Perfection were especially fine. The firm has some seedling chrysanthemums that will make their mark later.

Visitors this week: A. B. Hyatt, of Anderson; George Fulle, of Richmond, and W. W. Coles, of Kokomo. S.

NEW ORLEANS.

The opening of the theatrical season, when fashionable society takes a great interest, also race track and balls in advance of the carnival time, is bringing a good demand for flowers and decorations. Plants are just now not in much demand, and we are preparing our stock for the holidays and in anticipation of a good spring sale. The markets are generally dull, only foliage plants being disposed of.

Jules Fonta has been taking the place of E. Baker at the Upper city park. Several planters from Central America have been visiting the different parks lately. What does not seem to be generally known is that the Ficus elastica, which is grown here in quantity for decorative purposes, is not the kind from which the most of india rubber gum is extracted. They took great interest in the variety of ficus which is kept in the horticultural hall at Audubon park. They promised to forward to the association some exotic plants from Central America in exchange for some of our own production.

No home is complete without an Araucaria.

OUR LITTLE PETS

From Aschmann, in Philadelphia, we bought
An araucaria, a pet for our little girl.
Now we have two pets, the pride of our thought:
The little girl so sweet, a head full of curls,
And the araucaria with its everlasting green—
A more joyful home you never have seen.

Kentia Forsteriana

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 35 cents

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Rose—Its Cultivation, Varieties, etc.

By H. B. ELLWANGER. Directions for cultivation—for planting, pruning, propagation, the treatment of diseases and insect enemies—particularly valuable for its classification. Alphabetical and descriptive list of nine hundred and fifty-six varieties. Cloth. $1.25

Greenhouse Construction.

By PROF. L. R. TAFT. A complete manual on the building, heating, ventilating and arrangement of greenhouses, and the construction of hotbeds, frames and plant pits. Lucid descriptions and 118 diagrams and illustrations make every detail clear to the amateur and professional gardener and florist. Cloth. 218 pages. $1.50

Gardening for Pleasure.

By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the amateur in the fruit, vegetable and flower garden, with full directions for the greenhouse, conservatory and window garden. Technical terms and phrases professional gardeners use in writing or speaking on matters relating to horticulture have been avoided as far as possible. 404 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Gardening for Profit.

By PETER HENDERSON. The standard work on market and family gardening. The successful experience of the author for more than thirty years, and his willingness to tell, as he does in this work, the secret of his success for the benefit of others, enables him to give most valuable information. The book is profusely illustrated. 376 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Mushrooms—How to Grow Them.

By WM. FALCONER. This is the most practical work on the subject ever written, and the only book on growing mushrooms published in America. The author describes how he grows mushrooms and how they are grown for profit by the leading market gardeners, and for home use by the most successful private growers. Engravings drawn from nature expressly for this work. Cloth. $1.00

The Chrysanthemum.

By ARTHUR HERRINGTON, formerly president of Chrysanthemum Society of America. The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. 50 cents

The History and Culture of Grafted Roses for Forcing.

By ALEX. MONTGOMERY, JR. The most important contribution to the modern literature of the rose. Of much interest to every rose grower and of utmost value to growers of grafted roses. Containing practical description of the process of grafting with full details of planting and culture; also directions for treatment to carry the plants a second year. 35 cents

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth, 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.

By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. SC. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.

By PETER HENDERSON. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $4.00

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.

By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result of 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

The Young Market Gardener.

By T. GREINER. A guide to beginners in market gardening in the use of greenhouse, hotbeds and frames; together with instructions for open-air operations, and the ways of selling and preparing vegetables for market. Illustrated. Paper. 50 cents

The Propagation of Plants.

By ANDREW S. FULLER. Illustrated with numerous engravings. Describing the process of hybridizing and crossing and also the many different modes by which cultivated plants may be propagated and multiplied. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50

Practical Floriculture.

By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the successful propagation of florists' plants. A detailed account of the requisites to success and a clear explanation of improved methods. For the amateur and professional florist. 325 pages. Cloth. Postpaid. $1.50

The Nursery Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. A complete guide to the multiplication of plants. The book comprises full practical directions for sowing, the making of all kinds of layers, stools, cuttings, propagation by bulbs and tubers, and very complete accounts of all the leading kinds of budding, grafting and inarching. An alphabetical catalogue of about 1500 plants—of fruit, kitchen-garden, ornamental and greenhouse species—with directions for their multiplication. Cloth. $1.00

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Roses are much better, some fine stock, principally Brides and Maids, being seen. The demand for chrysanthemums has steadied down to a large extent, but a great many more were sold last week than heretofore. Some of the best varieties are now shown and sell to good advantage. The condition of carnations has not changed to any extent. The best blooms come from outside sources. Home-grown violets are hard to secure. One grower has a fine lot of Gov. Herrick, which are about as fine as any in this section. Trade is reported as being good the latter part of the week with most of the retailers. Many advance orders were booked for Thanksgiving day.

St. Paul.

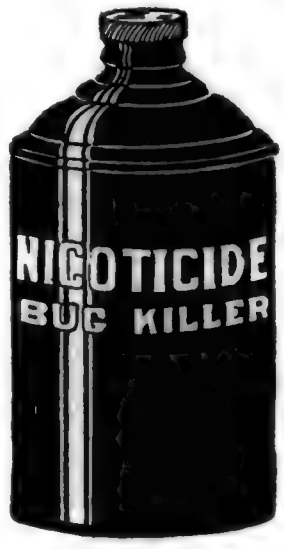
The store of the Swanson Floral Co. was damaged to some extent by a fire in an adjoining building. A number of palms and other plants were practically ruined and it will be necessary to repaint the interior of the store.

Holm & Olson had the decorations for the Hill wedding at St. Mary's church, also the decorating at the Hill residence. Aug. Swanson was favored with the order for the bouquets for the wedding, which were made of orchids and white violets.

J. R. Fotheringham, representing F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., was a caller, showing the Winsor carnation.

Minneapolis.

An interview with Otto Will, of Will & Son, discloses the fact that their carnations are doing exceptionally well. In the course of the next ten days or two weeks they will be cutting as fine a lot of Craig as seen in this section for some time. Lady Bountiful is also doing well with them, and they are cutting a large number of roses, which find ready sale.



Jas. Souden, of the Donaldson Glass Block, Saturday evening had a handsome bunch of Winsor carnations on display, which were greatly admired by a number of florists. FELIX.

JOLIET, ILL.—T. C. Shepherd, for many years superintendent of West park, will leave the management of the park December 1. He is a landscape gardener of ability and his thorough knowledge of plant life has made him a man of value to the city.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The free chrysanthemum show at the South park botanical gardens closed November 19. Many hundreds of men, women and children made use of the opportunity to enjoy the show, which is said to have surpassed that of previous years.

Greenhouse Heating.

NOT ENOUGH PIPING.

I have a greenhouse, 10x20 and ten feet to the ridge, with brick foundation. The north side and west end are papered and clapboarded, the inside sheathed with matched boards. The south side and east end have glass. The boiler is in the northeast corner. The flow pipe is 1½-inch, with expansion tank at highest point. The flow drops three inches, then returns under the bench on the south side, then with a fall of two inches returns to north side, where it divides with a tee into two 1¼-inch pipes. These connect before entering the boiler. Is there enough piping and have I arranged it properly for Wisconsin climate?

L. C. P.

I think the following plan of piping will be much more satisfactory than what you have installed. In fact, the present piping is not more than half what should be installed for an exposed house with hot water heat in your climate. Starting from the boiler, if it is desirable to use an elevated flow because of doors or other openings, carry a 2-inch flow pipe to the west end, eighteen inches from the roof along the north side, then drop at the northwest corner to a coil made of seven 1¼-inch pipes which should have a gentle grade, say eight inches from the northwest corner to the boiler. Run this coil under the bench around the three exposed sides of the house. Lay the manifold horizontal so the seven pipes will form a gridiron under the bench on the three sides of the house. Place a manifold on the end of the seven pipes near the boiler and carry a return from this manifold back to the boiler by a single 1½-inch pipe. To the main return near the boiler connect a ¾-inch pipe which should run into the bottom of a well elevated expansion tank. Do not connect the expansion tank to the main flow, but place an aircock in the highest point of the main flow.

L. C. C.

NEEDS A CHECK-VALVE.

We have an eighteen horsepower Huber traction boiler with 4-inch flows for steam and 3-inch returns. The trouble is that when we get up a pressure of steam of about ten pounds it forces the water back through the return pipes until it is all out of the boiler column. Would a check-valve in the 3-inch return pipe work; that is, would the pressure of steam permit it to open enough to let the condensation back into the boiler? Or would the pressure from the boiler be greater so that it would keep the check closed and the condensed steam out of the boiler? Our boiler is about three feet below our coils. We have no steam-trap or anything but gravity to get the water back to the boiler.

H. F. Co.

The installation of a swing check in the main return near the boiler should prove a decided benefit. It may, however, prove necessary to discharge the condensation into a hot well and return it to the boiler by means of a trap or feed pump unless the boiler can be lowered considerably. If you have valves in the system, close the valves in the return as you begin to fire and keep them closed until the system is hot, then open them and the circulation will be completed. Allow the air vents to remain open a wee bit so as to lead the live steam into the system should it for any reason become cold. These precautions, with a swing check in the return, should remedy the difficulty unless the difference in level is not sufficient for a gravity system.

L. C. C.

CHANGING TO STEAM.

I have three houses, one for mums and plants, 14x60 feet; one for smilax, 14x 60 feet; a carnation house, 14x130 feet, and a lean-to, 6x60 feet. The cellar under the shed in which is the boiler is 7x42 feet. I am now using hot water, but wish to change to steam on account of the length of the carnation house. I have planned to run a 3-inch main in a trench along the cellar wall, branching into each house, with 2-inch flow pipes overhead under the ridge, and return with 1¼-inch, or 1½-inch pipes under the benches. How many returns will I need in each house with outside temperature, at times, 10 to 20 degrees below zero? What horsepower boiler? I intend to use a tubular horizontal and want one large enough to carry all the houses if they were extended to 130 feet.

C. C. W.

The following amount of radiation will be required by each of the houses in question: Violet house, 6x60, five returns of 1¼-inch pipe. The cooler house, 14x60 feet, a 2-inch flow and eight 1¼-inch returns. The warmer house, 14x60 feet, a 2-inch flow and nine 1¼-inch returns, while the house 14x130 feet should be provided with a 2-inch riser and eleven 1¼-inch returns. A boiler rated to carry 2,500 square feet of radiation should be amply large to carry all these houses when extended to a uniform length of 130 feet.

L. C. C.

TROUBLE WITH CIRCULATION.

Will you tell me how to improve the circulation in my greenhouse? My house is 22x100. I have a twenty horse-power boiler with a 3-inch flow overhead, continuous fall, and at the farther end drops under the bench and returns in eleven 2-inch level pipes. These pipes connect in a 2-inch return to the bottom of the boiler. Have open expansion tank, the bottom of which is two feet above the highest point in flow, with vent pipe running to tank. I have only a 2½-inch flow-hole in the boiler, 1¼-inch return. The flow gets nicely warm until it comes back for about twenty feet in the returns, about two-thirds of the way, after long firing, then cools off.

L. G. B.

If I understand your statement correctly, you say the riser is vented to connect with the expansion tank, which is only two feet higher than the highest point in the system. Disconnect the expansion tank from the highest point in the flow, place a small air-cock at this point, which test several times a day to see that there is no air in the system, then elevate the expansion tank eight or ten or even fifteen feet above the highest point in the system, even if you put it out doors on a platform. Run a pipe from the bottom of the expansion tank to the main return near the boiler. A ¾-inch pipe will be large enough. Put a water gauge on the expansion tank and keep at least ten or twelve inches of water in it all the time, except when firing hard, when it will be much deeper. As soon as opportunity will permit have the openings in the boiler enlarged to the full size of the pipes you are using for flow and return. I think the modification of the expansion tank will remedy the difficulty to a large extent.

CYPRESS.

The demand for cypress is not abnormal, but is nevertheless of fair proportions for the season. Stocks at the mills are reported ample, but are not heavy enough to create uneasiness as to the disposition of the surplus, and manufacturers are well satisfied to continue the operation of their mills and pile up the product. Some items, like No. 1 common, are exceedingly scarce and on these an advanced price of $1 is reported. A few other items are also firmer than list and on the whole there is a strong feeling permeating the cypress trade. Dealers here report moderate stocks on hand and say that they are selling considerable sash and door stock, tank material and finish to the woodworking factories, which are large consumers of cypress as it is the best and cheapest of soft woods, only a small part of the output being used for greenhouse building.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Thomas Mansfield, of Lockport, N. Y., has added three houses 55x70 of King construction. There are cement benches for carnations and a Kroeschell boiler heats the whole plant. The sale of mums has been satisfactory.

C. A. Dole, of Lockport, N. Y., has prepared for a banner season and believes it is coming.

George McClure, the Buffalo landscape architect, is spoken of as being the successful candidate to survey the banks of the Erie canal, with a view to planting shade trees along the route. He uses a tree-planter combined with a wagon that moves the largest trees with comparative ease.

Townsend & Fleming, of Buffalo, report big landscape business this fall, having, among other items, the planning and planting of an estate of 600 acres in Connecticut.

Superintendent Roney, of the Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., reports big crops of carnations and roses in sight.

George L. Graham, of Bradford, Pa., has removed and rebuilt his whole plant and now has a thoroughly up-to-date plant. His stock looks fine, and demand being good he naturally feels optimistic.

F. A. Dorman, Jamestown, N. Y., has returned from his hunting trip to find business good and stock well taken care of in his absence.

E. W. Worden, of Jamestown, has the sympathy of the craft in the illness of his life partner, who was recently stricken with paralysis. It is hoped she may soon recover.

A chrysanthemum show, the first in Hornellsville, N. Y., in ten years, was given by William A. Wettlin, November 17. He is figuratively kicking himself because he did not think of this before, as many customers, present and prospective, said they had no idea he had such a place or such a fine stock.

A. W. Woeppel, of Corning, N. Y., has thoroughly established himself in his new location opposite the cemetery. He has about 50,000 feet of glass and several acres of excellent land. The stock looks well. He is building a handsome residence close to the establishment for the use of his own family, some of whom assist him in the business. W. M.

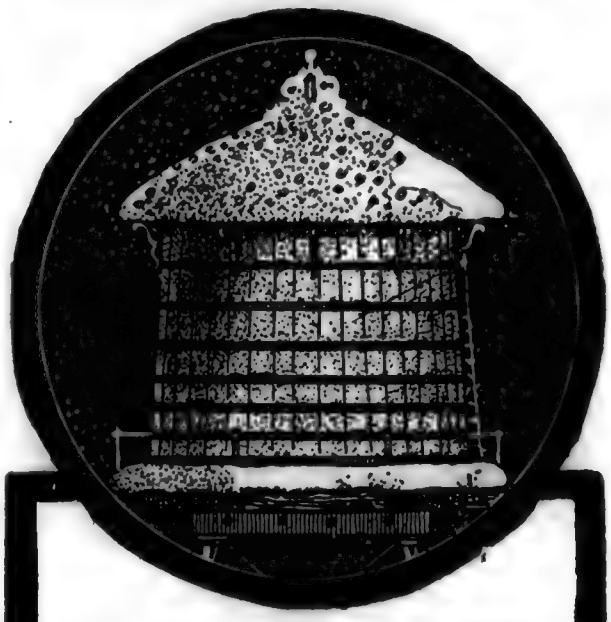
The Test of Construction



OF what use is first-class workmanship and the best material if the construction of your house is antiquated and out-of-date? There is as much in the style of the house as in the material of which it is built, and too much stress cannot be laid on the "right kind of construction."

There is a special house for each special condition and the ordinary planing-mill knows nothing of construction details. The first step toward "right construction" is to get our catalogue and estimate. Write now and start right—erect houses that will enable you to compete with the other fellow.

Caldwell Steel Towers

are graceful and handsome, and at the same time possess sufficient strength to sustain four times the weight of tank full of water and resist any wind pressure, such as gales and cyclones, that come along. The stability of the Caldwell tower insures the tank always being ready for business without danger of interruption from causes that many times render the ordinary outfit insecure and inefficient. Confirmation of the reliableness of the Caldwell tank and tower can be had from any number of Florists and Nurserymen, some near you. Ask for names of such, and also illustrated catalogue.

THE PITH

of this boiler question gets down to the coal question—what does it burn? What heat do you get from the coal you burn? One boiler may have a grate that cuts out the ashes in an "improved" way, and by the same token it will have more ashes to cut out. The more coal you burn, the more the ashes—but do these ashes mean an equivalent in heat? We can prove to you that the Hitchings boiler is the best greenhouse boiler—prove it by what it has proven for others.

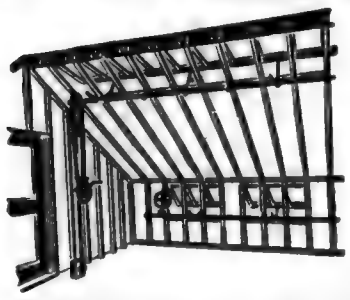
U-BAR.



EVER figure what it costs you retail florists not to advertise? Take for instance, your windows—would a small window with small panes and heavy framing set off your flowers attractively—would it give that sweep and effect of distance so essential to perfect flower displaying? So you put in the right kind of front, but spoil the advertising effect by an unattractive, small glassed, dingy show-room greenhouse. You lose your inside grip on your customer. Build a U-Bar Show-Room with its attractive, bubble-like construction. It's cheap advertising. It's a sure grip. that a new house must come your way next spring—you have known it all along, but now it's a cold, undodgeable fact. That being settled, the next question is, who will build it and what construction shall it be? The best thing to do is to get together all the greenhouse catalogs and circulars you can, go into them carefully and see if the thorough way we treat our houses, our constructions are not conclusive proof of the kind of things we do.

Last year along this time we began "punching up the dreamers" and a lot of them got so thoroughly awake that their house was done a couple of weeks or so before they wanted it in the Spring—begin to plan NOW for THEN.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Early Sweet Peas.

Some weeks ago A. C. Zvolanek cautioned us to look out for a green worm that would be liable to eat the young, tender growths of our sweet peas. It has arrived, along with the first blossoms on the plants, the seeds of which were sown in the beds August 22. You can hurry the time of flowering very little by fire heat. Every ray of sunshine must have full play on the house, with ventilation on all possible occasions, and plenty of water at the roots. Hellebore sprinkled on the foliage, or a weak solution of Paris green, may destroy the worm, but I would prefer a safer plan: to look over the vines every morning and pick off the worms. In appearance it is much like the green worm so destructive to our mignonette in the month of September.

If the soil in the beds is only five or six inches deep, and well drained, then a mulch of well rotted manure will help. Another attention is the necessity of keeping the leading shoots faithfully tied up to the strings. It is from the top of the leading growths you get your first and most valuable flowers, and if these growths are allowed to droop, the flower stems will assert their natural right to look up to the light, and you will have crooked stems, much impaired in value.

As soon as you have a low bed or bench of chrysanthemums entirely cut out, you can plant it with another crop of sweet peas. For this purpose you should have sown a few seeds in 3-inch pots a month ago. If planted now they will be in full bearing by Easter. It is better to trust to the special winter-flowering kinds, for the old standard varieties, like Emily Henderson and Blanche Ferry, will hardly be in full flower for this early Easter.

Late Chrysanthemums.

Mums have had their brief but glorious day, and most florists will say to them, farewell, but not for ever. Yet I notice a few old varieties looking fine and a promise of good cutting for at least two weeks to come. They are the pure white Convention Hall, that splendid pink, Helen Frick, and that fine rich yellow, Nagoya. Our specialist will tell you of other and perhaps more valuable late flowers, but these three varieties are fine late kinds and easy to grow. Many florists occupy a great deal of space on their benches with mums, and if it were not that we could fill up with lilies, azaleas, Boston ferns and other Easter stock, the mums would not be profitable in the least; but florists within easy driving distance of a city can always find stock to fill up the space when the mums are cut and gone.

Empty the Mum Benches.

This reminds me of something I often see done, and which always produces irritation. It is the leaving on the bench the four or five inches of soil in which the chrysanthemums grew. The boys don't do it because they want to use the soil during the winter or spring. The excuse is that they have not the time to remove it; can't spare the labor. This is not a valid excuse. If it is essential and better for the plants to come that the soil be removed, it should be done at any inconvenience. Do you think it is good treatment to put a lily, an azalea, a hybrid rose or cyclamen in this greasy bed of soil? Not only is it most ungardenerlike and cruel to the eye, but it ruins the soil for future use until it has had the atmosphere and frosts of another winter. Get it out and dump it in a shallow and narrow pile, where the frosts of winter will penetrate every particle of the pile. If left there till the sun and winds of May have left it mellow, most useful this old soil will be.

Uses for the Soil.

Most likely it was good, fresh soil when you put it on the benches last spring, and to it you added, perhaps, a liberal quantity of animal manure and some bone-dust which is not yet all dissolved. In the spring the old soil will do for filling your vases, veranda boxes, for tulips next fall, and for many of your soft-wooded bedding plants. City florists are continually being asked for such soil for a dressing for lawns, and you are justified in charging a good, big price that will more than pay all the cost of removing it from the benches now.

A Way of Escape.

With the intention of using the soil on the bench the following spring, and fully aware that if I stood the pots on the soil its physical condition in the spring would be mud, I thought of a piece of tarred roofing paper under each pot. The crop placed on the bench was Bermuda Easter lilies in 6-inch pots. The paper was cut in 6-inch squares and placed under each pot. The worms were safely excluded, and with careful watering the soil was not overwet. The fumes of tar are not healthy to plant life, but there was little of it, and no harm was done. In this way the soil was preserved in good order, and you must excuse me while I finish this earthy story, the program of which was laid out in a more or less feeble mind months before its performance.

Easter that year was extremely early, March 25. Lilies were all in and sold, and on March 27 two "old hosses," including the writer, spread a heavy dressing of bone-meal on the surface of the bed and then forked it over. April 1 we planted the bed with a fine lot of young American Beauty roses. I must now cut this story short, and will only say that it was the best strike and the brightest piece of inspiration that ever fell on us. So if impossible to remove the soil when your mums are cut, do something both for the benefit of the plants in pots and to preserve the usefulness of the soil.

Crops to Follow Mums.

You may have some crops waiting to occupy some of these beds. Here are a few. If you have calla lilies in pots you will get large flowers and large quantities by planting them out. They should be on a low bed, with plenty of headroom. If you have any antirrhinums propagated in summer, either from cuttings or seed, plant them on a raised bench where they will get full light and plenty of air. A more important crop would be dahlias. They, too, should have headroom, perfect light and plenty of water. About 55 degrees at night will suit them. If planted by the middle of December they will be in flower by Easter. I don't pretend to be posted on the best forcing varieties, although we grew fifty feet of a bench two years ago and found a ready sale for all we could cut. Some large firms in the east make a specialty of prepared roots of dahlias for forcing, which are much better for the purpose than roots lifted from the ground as recently as last October. The single, cactus and pompon dahlias are best for forcing. Leave the large show class for outdoors.

I have already alluded to sweet peas as a crop to succeed a bench of mums. If you have not got them already started in pots, then sow them in the bed where they are to flower, and sow the old standard sorts, such as Emily Henderson, Blanche Ferry, Countess of Radnor, Catherine Tracy, and others. These sorts will not flower before the middle of April in our dark, stormy winter, but from then on for two months they pay well and thousands can be picked. So after all you may not have many benches to empty. I hope not, for it's heavy work and college graduates don't take to it kindly. They would rather kick another fellow's head off at football.

William Scott.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THANKSGIVING TRADE.

A summing up of the reports of Thanksgiving trade makes it clear that the retail business was better than ever before for this holiday. There is no point from which retailers fail to report most satisfactory business, but at the principal wholesale centers there is report of no great increase in the demands upon those markets. As is usually the case, growers at the approach of the holiday had made preparation for supply to meet a greater demand than materialized. Thanksgiving is a good day for florists everywhere, but it is not a day that calls for greatly increased supplies, or which will warrant sharp increases in the prices. This year the demand upon wholesale markets was undoubtedly affected by the large supplies of chrysanthemums which were general throughout the country. Every man who produces any portion of his own supplies was largely stocked up with mums and it was inevitable that first efforts should be toward the disposal of them.

A LOUISVILLE VETERAN.

Jacob Schulz has been in business at Louisville, Ky., for thirty years. He has met with uninterrupted success during all that period and has kept in step with the progress of the times, now occupying one of the handsomest stores in the country, with facilities second to none for handling the best class of trade.

The accompanying illustrations show the exterior and interior of the store at 644 Fourth avenue, which Mr. Schulz built for his own occupancy. The store is large and well equipped with all the facilities necessary for a large and steadily growing business. The entire store has mosaic and tile flooring, all the fixtures being white. The best of stock is carried and in large quantities. The store front presents a most unique appearance, the window having a rounded section in the center which permits of an unusual display. In the picture, Mr. Schulz himself is seen standing in the doorway.

The large conservatory at the rear of the store is of inestimable value, for it affords not only facilities for the storage of plants for decorations, but also for the display of stock at holiday seasons. Without a conservatory an up-to-date florist labors under decided disadvantages. This one is well finished, dry and perfectly clean.

One of the other pictures shows a portion of the range of greenhouses on the Cherokee road. There are twenty houses in the range, devoted to the production of bedding stock, plants for the holiday seasons, and also to the growing of cut flowers, but Mr. Schulz finds it impossible to grow anywhere near all the stock required for his trade. He is among the large buyers in the wholesale markets outside of Louisville.

Mr. Schulz is a believer in liberal advertising and has published in the Louisville newspapers some of the most unique advertisements ever printed by any florist. He has made use of the color processes to obtain, even if at considerable expense, a showing which could not be overlooked by anyone who so much as glanced at the page. He has used special designs showing flowers in colors.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Schulz.

NEW TABLE DECORATION.

The firm of Wilhelm Schiedt, wholesale hollow glass merchants, Leipzig, says a German trade paper, has brought into commerce a glass decoration in empire style that consists of small crystal vases connected with one another by means of chains of glass. These can be employed in any desired number, and even with so few as six vases and chains and a few flowers, these form a charming decoration for a dinner table. The so-called Cricklight lamps, in the same style, harmonize well with the vases, and covered with silk shades having pearl fringes, and with pictures, or not so decorated, heighten greatly the general effect.

Dallas, Tex.—W. L. Smith, for years in business at Aurora, Ill., and widely known, is now with the Haskell Avenue Floral Co. He lately has been located in the east.

THE FLORISTS' CALENDAR.

There are several special occasions in the business year of the florist, and beginning in the order of the calendar these important occasions are as follows: New Year's day, upon which date many thousands of floral tokens of regard are delivered to maid and matron, and not only to these representatives of the feminine contingent, but also to the heads of corporations and various other officials, both state and national. Next in order comes St. Valentine's day, and the giving of flowers and flowering plants on this tender occasion has most wonderfully increased of late years; in fact, to such a degree has this custom already attained in some of our large cities that it seems almost like an echo of Christmas time to many of the florists. Then comes that greatest of flower festivals, Eastertide, a period that is the most satisfying and withal the most trying of the whole year to the florist, for great quantities of perishable flowers and flowering plants must be so timed and prepared as to be at the height of their perfection for that one week. All this preparation must be made regardless of the weather, and timed differently each year, on account of Easter being a movable feast, and as such only recurring upon a similar date at long intervals.

After this comes the summer routine work of the florist, and the summer vacations of his customers, and it is sometimes darkly hinted that the unpaid florist's bill from the preceding winter and spring has provided the necessary lucre for the said vacation. But, of course, this is only hearsay, and there are doubtless but few people mean enough to take advantage of an innocent florist. And after what are called "the melancholy days" have come, and at the end of "brown November," the swift passage of time brings us to our national Thanksgiving season, and we are reminded that this period is one of great importance to housewives, to turkeys and to florists, the one other great flower season that is included in our list for the year being Christmas. This festival utilizes great quantities of flowers and plants, and means much anxiety for the florist, owing to the difficulties of safe delivery during midwinter weather, and in addition to this there may be, and frequently is, a scarcity of some kinds of stock with a corresponding stiffening of the wholesale prices.

This variation in prices for cut flowers is a frequent source of trouble among dealers and customers, for many of the latter do not realize the fact that flowers are a commodity, dealt in by cut-flower commission houses to the amount of millions of dollars every year, and that these commission dealers keep a close watch upon the supply and demand, with the natural result that prices are subject to change from time to time in accordance with trade conditions.—W. Brick-bottomed Propagating Bench.

It is due the divine flower to give it every advantage possible that will preserve or increase its vigor, there being no better place to begin than with propagation. This operation may be said to be the starting point in carnation culture. It is here especially that the grower must use keen observation and no ordinary judgment in the selection of cuttings and treatment during their stay in the sand. Of course it is essential that strong, healthy cuttings be procured and just as much so that provision be made for means by which to root them properly.

It may seem persistent on my part to dwell at length on the subject of a brick bottom for the propagating bench, but experience having clearly proved its decided superiority over any other material within the means of commercial growers in general, I feel that excuses are unnecessary.

It may be briefly described as an ordinarily constructed bench, the framework of the bottom provided with an extra number of cross-pieces, placed at such distance apart as to furnish every brick a bearing of about one inch on each end. Lay flat any number of bricks wide that may be decided upon, using no mortar or cement; sides of same material set edgewise cemented end to end and on bottom. New brick make a neater job and can be more quickly put in place, but for all practical purposes are no better than second-hand ones that have been kept clean and dry. Oven-burnt or crooked brick, otherwise known as swell-bellies, are unsuitable, not being uniform in shape or porosity.

Give a liberal coat of freshly made whitewash containing flowers of sulphur in about the proportion of one pound of sulphur to forty gallons of wash. Add the sulphur at the time of slaking the lime, when the mixture is boiling most violently, as by this means a portion is dissolved, forming a sulphur solution; consequently when applied, the bricks in absorbing the liquid must take into their pores a certain amount of sulphur, a condition which would not obtain if simply stirred in the wash when cold or luke warm. Start with hot water in slaking the lime, thinning with could cut. Some large firms in the east make a specialty of prepared roots of dahlias for forcing, which are much better for the purpose than roots lifted from the ground as recently as last October. The single, cactus and pompon dahlias are best for forcing. Leave the large show class for outdoors.

I have already alluded to sweet peas as a crop to succeed a bench of mums. If you have not got them already started in pots, then sow them in the bed where they are to flower, and sow the old standard sorts, such as Emily Henderson, Blanche Ferry, Countess of Radnor, Catherine Tracy, and others. These sorts will not flower before the middle of April in our dark, stormy winter, but from then on for two months they pay well and thousands can be picked. So after all you may not have many benches to empty. I hope not, for it's heavy work and college graduates don't take to it kindly. They would rather kick another fellow's head off at football.

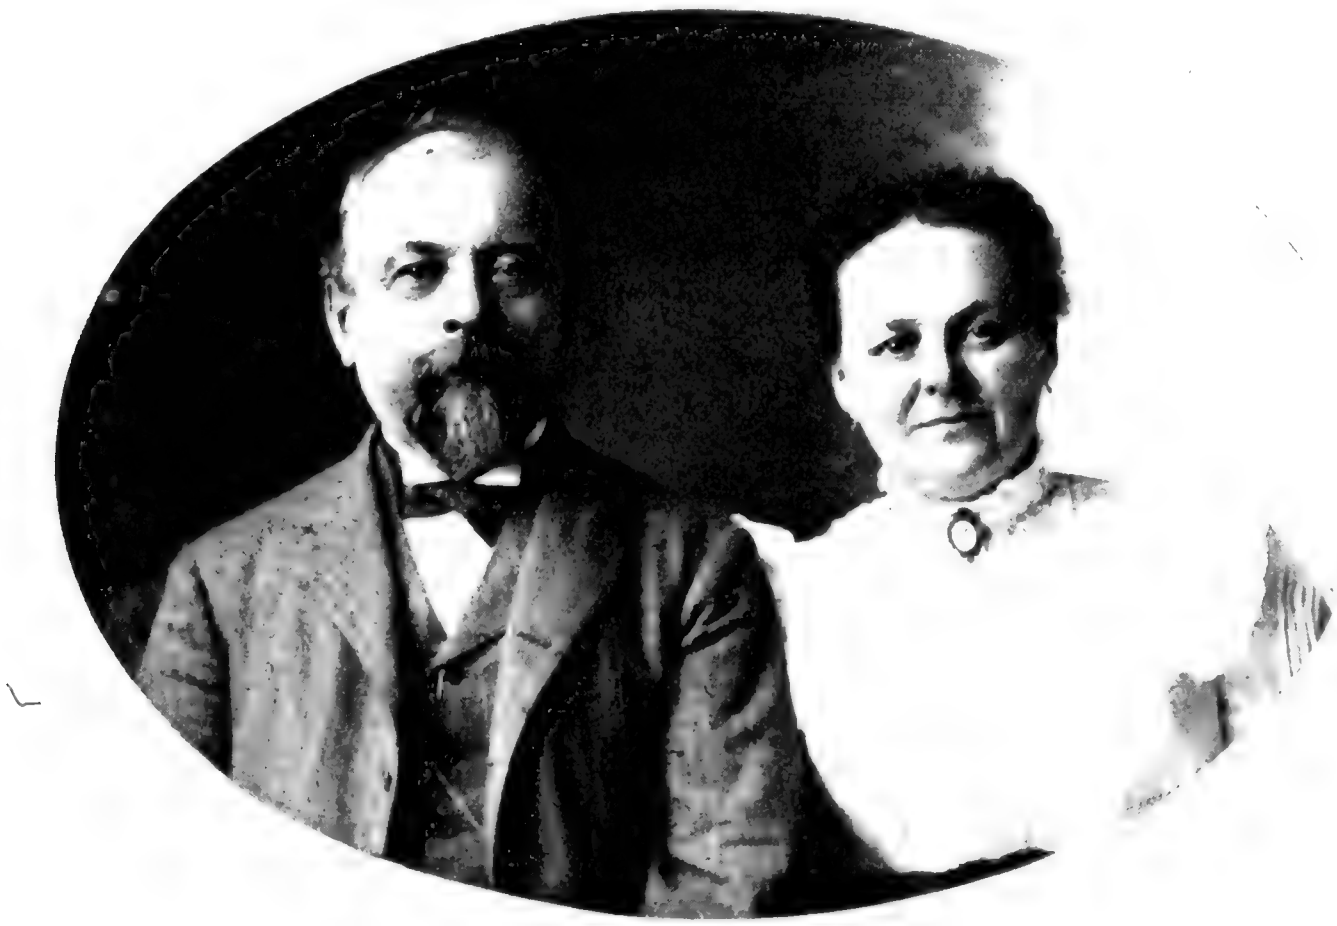
THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THANKSGIVING TRADE.

A summing up of the reports of Thanksgiving trade makes it clear that the retail business was better than ever before for this holiday. There is no point from which retailers fail to report most satisfactory business, but at the principal wholesale centers there is report of no great increase in the demands upon those markets. As is usually the case, growers at the approach of the holiday had made preparation for supply to meet a greater demand than materialized. Thanksgiving is a good day for florists everywhere, but it is not a day that calls for greatly increased supplies, or which will warrant sharp increases in the prices. This year the demand upon wholesale markets was undoubtedly affected by the large supplies of chrysanthemums which were general throughout the country. Every man who produces any portion of his own supplies was largely stocked up with mums and it was inevitable that first efforts should be toward the disposal of them.

A LOUISVILLE VETERAN.



Jacob Schulz has been in business at Louisville, Ky., for thirty years. He has met with uninterrupted success during all that period and has kept in step with the progress of the times, now occupying one of the handsomest stores in the country, with facilities second to none for handling the best class of trade.

The accompanying illustrations show the exterior and interior of the store at 644 Fourth avenue, which Mr. Schulz built for his own occupancy. The store is large and well equipped with all the facilities necessary for a large and steadily growing business. The entire store has mosaic and tile flooring, all the fixtures being white. The best of stock is carried and in large quantities. The store front presents a most unique appearance, the window having a rounded section in the center which permits of an unusual display. In the picture, Mr. Schulz himself is seen standing in the doorway.

The large conservatory at the rear of the store is of inestimable value, for it affords not only facilities for the storage of plants for decorations, but also for the display of stock at holiday seasons. Without a conservatory an up-to-date florist labors under decided disadvantages. This one is well finished, dry and perfectly clean.

One of the other pictures shows a portion of the range of greenhouses on the Cherokee road. There are twenty houses in the range, devoted to the production of bedding stock, plants for the holiday seasons, and also to the growing of cut flowers, but Mr. Schulz finds it impossible to grow anywhere near all the stock required for his trade. He is among the large buyers in the wholesale markets outside of Louisville.

Mr. Schulz is a believer in liberal advertising and has published in the Louisville newspapers some of the most unique advertisements ever printed by any florist. He has made use of the color processes to obtain, even if at considerable expense, a showing which could not be overlooked by anyone who so much as glanced at the page. He has used special designs showing flowers in colors.

NEW TABLE DECORATION.

The firm of Wilhelm Schiedt, wholesale hollow glass merchants, Leipzig, says a German trade paper, has brought into commerce a glass decoration in empire style that consists of small crystal vases connected with one another by means of chains of glass. These can be employed in any desired number, and even with so few as six vases and chains and a few flowers, these form a charming decoration for a dinner table. The so-called Cricklight lamps, in the same style, harmonize well with the vases, and covered with silk shades having pearl fringes, and with pictures, or not so decorated, heighten greatly the general effect.

Dallas, Tex.—W. L. Smith, for years in business at Aurora, Ill., and widely known, is now with the Haskell Avenue Floral Co. He lately has been located in the east.

THE FLORISTS' CALENDAR.

There are several special occasions in the business year of the florist, and beginning in the order of the calendar these important occasions are as follows: New Year's day, upon which date many thousands of floral tokens of regard are delivered to maid and matron, and not only to these representatives of the feminine contingent, but also to the heads of corporations and various other officials, both state and national. Next in order comes St. Valentine's day, and the giving of flowers and flowering plants on this tender occasion has most wonderfully increased of late years; in fact, to such a degree has this custom already attained in some of our large cities that it seems almost like an echo of Christmas time to many of the florists. Then comes that greatest of flower festivals, Eastertide, a period that is the most satisfying and withal the most trying of the whole year to the florist, for great quantities of perishable flowers and flowering plants must be so timed and prepared as to be at the height of their perfection for that one week. All this preparation must be made regardless of the weather, and timed differently each year, on account of Easter being a movable feast, and as such only recurring upon a similar date at long intervals.

After this comes the summer routine work of the florist, and the summer vacations of his customers, and it is sometimes darkly hinted that the unpaid florist's bill from the preceding winter and spring has provided the necessary lucre for the said vacation. But, of course, this is only hearsay, and there are doubtless but few people mean enough to take advantage of an innocent florist. And after what are called "the melancholy days" have come, and at the end of "brown November," the swift passage of time brings us to our national Thanksgiving season, and we are reminded that this period is one of great importance to housewives, to turkeys and to florists, the one other great flower season that is included in our list for the year being Christmas. It may seem persistent on my part to dwell at length on the subject of a brick bottom for the propagating bench, but experience having clearly proved it decided superiority over any other material within the means of commercial growers in general, I feel that excuses are unnecessary.

It may be briefly described as an ordinarily constructed bench, the framework of the bottom provided with an extra number of cross pieces, placed at such distance apart as to furnish every brick a bearing of about one inch on each end. Lay flat any number of bricks wide that may be decided upon using no mortar or cement; sides of same material set edgewise cemented end to end and on bottom. Add the sulphur at the time of slaking the lime, when the mixture is boiling most violently, as by this means a portion is dissolved, forming a sulphur solution; consequently when applied, the bricks in absorbing the liquid must take into their pores a certain amount of sulphur, a condition which would not obtain if simply stirred in the wash when cold or luke warm. Start with hot water in slaking the lime, thinning with cold water to the required consistency, and remember that there is a difference between flowers of sulphur and pulverized sulphur.

This same wash is recommended for use on the ordinary wood-bottomed bench, though it is obvious that the best results would be gained by its use on new lumber. The principal advantages of the brick-bottomed bench are, its perfect drainage and the uniform, mild heat given off by the bricks, beneath which are placed the heating pipes.

I venture the opinion that those who cling to the belief that carnation cuttings should be given no bottom heat whatever, would be shaken in their faith were they to make a comparative test of results, using this style of bench.

We sometimes hear the advice to change the sand, or at least remove and replace with fresh an inch of the surface after rooting a batch of cuttings. In the absence of full details regarding the conditions and management of the different benches in use, this is certainly safe advice, but I see no reason why the same sand cannot be used during one whole propagating season—a subject for another lesson. Geo. S. Osborn.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

All About Cuttings.

Selecting the cuttings is an important part of the operation. Only first-class cuttings should be put into sand. Any other kind will only cause disappointment and loss later on. No cutting should be taken from a plant that is not healthy and no cutting should be taken from a plant when in a wilted condition. The best time to take off cuttings is in the first half of the morning or on cloudy days. Then the cuttings are crisp and fresh and it is easier to keep them so than when they are wilted to start with. Lay some damp paper in the bottom of your basket for the cuttings to lie on and sprinkle with cool water as soon as you have filled the basket and cover over with damp paper. Keep them in a cool place from the time they are taken from the plants until they are in the sand and always keep them moist.

It is generally agreed that the best cutting is the young break that is made after a flower stem is cut. Most varieties break around the lower part of the flower stem before the bloom is cut and many of these young shoots are large enough to make splendid, strong cuttings, even before the bloom is out. A few varieties, however, Lady Bountiful for instance, will give you no cuttings until the bloom is cut.

Don't take the shoots from too high up on the stem, they are no good. You will notice that on the upper part of the flower stem the young shoots will have perhaps an inch of stem before any leaves begin. Avoid all such, as they will never make good, strong plants. Young blooming shoots that have not begun to run up make very good cuttings and we do not hesitate to use them when we are desirous of increasing the stock as much as possible.

If you have a limited number of some fine variety, of which you want to make all you can, and if you are thoroughly satisfied that it is what you think, then it will pay you to top back all the blooming shoots in order to encourage the young shoots to come sooner. Do not cut down the whole plant at one time, but allow the shoots to show the bud to a certain stage and then top it back about half way down the stem. In a few days a few more will be ready to cut back, and in this way you will not check the plant so severely and the plant will always have a fair amount of growth coming on. The cuttings will mature better, too. Do not feed such plants very strongly, either.

Store of Jacob Schulz, Louisville, Ky.

Select your cuttings of about an even size as far as possible. An even lot of cuttings will make an even lot of plants. It pays much better to put in two batches of cuttings two weeks apart, and all of an even size, than to put in one large batch of cuttings, some good and some too young and soft. A cutting does not need to be extra large to be strong, but it should be of fair size and of such a kind as will gather strength and grow into a strong plant.

We do not trim our cuttings as much these days as we did years ago. Use a sharp knife to make a clean cut at the bottom and remove only such leaves as will sever from the stem without leaving any stub. Then trim back such leaves as turn outward or downward so that all the leaves that remain will point upward. Take off about one-third of the leaves that you trim, or less, as occasion may demand. You will soon learn by a little practice. Some varieties may not need any trimming at all more than the clean cut at the bottom.

After having taken off a lot of cuttings get them into the sand as quickly as possible. Lying around, even though they may be kept moist, does them no good. A. F. J. Baur.

DIET OF THE CARNATION.

This is a modern age and an age in which inquiry is being made into the reason of things. The day is rapidly passing when one can sit passively by and let things take their natural course or unnatural course, as the case may be. It is being proved, even to the most skeptical florist, that to make equal success with his competitors he must use all the best and latest cultural methods known.

The man who is raising live stock will first consider a place for the stock to be kept in, and then the feed that they will require to sustain life and growth. The florist must and does consider the housing of his carnations first. He should next consider the feed he is going to give these carnations to bring them to best maturity. How many florists are there who seriously consider the feeding of their plants? Is it any wonder that they are always saying that Smith or Jones must have a soil much superior to theirs?

Now to come down to the bottom of things, is it the superiority of Jones' soil itself, or is it the plant food that Jones adds to his soil, that counts? I am of the opinion that the food is the important factor in many cases, and will tell you why.

Plants must feed just as surely as man himself. Man chooses his food, such as steak, potatoes, pie, etc., and insists on having a variety. The carnation insists on a variety, too, such as nitrogen, phosphoric acid, potash, and does not grow well if it fails to get it. The man wants the thing that he gets the least of—the pie, for instance. The carnation seems to run along the same perverse lines, and what it craves, and seldom gets its proper share of, is potash.

Now, how does it happen that the carnation and many other plants go lacking for this important food, potash? It is not because the potash is more expensive than the other foods, as bone meal, because the fact is that potash costs no more than phosphoric acid and only about one-third as much as nitrogen. It is because the carnation can't call out through a megaphone, "Potash! Potash!" but must sit down and sulk and refuse to grow until it does get it. The florist knows that the carnation doesn't grow properly, but he is frequently in the dark as to the why.

The chemist now comes to the florist's aid in this extremity. When he analyzes the carnation he finds that a single plant removes from the soil in one growing season 99.12 grams of air dry material, containing 1.948 grams of nitrogen, 0.734 grams of phosphoric acid and 3.510 grams of potash. It can easily be seen from a comparison of these removals that the carnation must have as a diet nearly twice as much potash as nitrogen and about five times as much potash as phosphoric acid.

Now, as bone meal, the common fertilizer used by florists, contains no potash, and animal manures contain it in far too small proportions, it is as plain as the nose on your face that the carnation grower should satisfy the cravings of his carnations by giving them a liberal ration of potash. This can be provided through any of the potash salts, such as muriate of potash or sulphate of potash or from the best grades of bone and potash fertilizer. L. S. HASSELMAN.

SOFTWOOD ASHES.

I have a lot of wood ashes from soft wood, such as old bench lumber and willow trees. Will it do to use on carnations if I use a little more of it? Is it a good thing to mix lime with wood ashes? J. W.

I do not know the relative strength of hard and soft wood ashes, but I can see no reason why you should not use the soft wood ashes with good effect. Instead of using them in heavier applications, I would apply the same amount in each application, and, if deemed advisable, after seeing the effects of the first application you can apply it oftener.

I would not advise mixing lime and wood ashes. Not that it would be harmful, but because nothing would be gained by it. Both have practically the same effect on the plants and the soil, except that the ashes affect the plants quicker and the lime acts more on the soil. Use them separately and substitute one for the other occasionally if considered advisable. A. F. J. B.

POOR STEM AND CALYX.

I inclose a sample of my carnations. They burst and have leaf-spot. I have treated them with sulphur and lime as directed in the REVIEW, October 11. They grow finely and bloom freely, but the stems are weak. I gave them lime last week. When should I give them lime again? T. R.

You do not say what variety the bursted bud was taken from, and so I cannot tell you whether the fault is in your culture or whether it is characteristic of the variety and cannot be prevented altogether. You might reduce the bursting considerably by holding the temperature as evenly as possible, avoiding all sudden changes, and also in the watering. Keep them just a trifle on the dry side and do no feeding until the days get longer and lighter again.

Since your stems are already weak, I would not advise you to raise the temperature above 52 degrees at night, and 6 degrees warmer on cloudy days and 15 degrees warmer on sunny days. Also, don't raise too quickly in the morning nor drop too quickly in the evening, but make a gradual change from night temperature to day temperature and back again in the evening.

Do not apply the lime oftener than once each month. If this does not seem sufficient, then procure some hard wood ashes; they affect the stems quicker than lime. A. F. J. B.

FRANKEN BROS.

Lake Forest, Ill.
Nov. 28, 1906.

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS NUMBER, DECEMBER 13.

FLATBUSH, N. Y.—Henry and Paul Dailledouze have returned from their western trip. After the Chicago show they went to Denver and Colorado Springs, returning via Lafayette, Richmond and Cincinnati.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Carnations Registered.

James D. Cockroft, Northport, N. Y., registers the following varieties:

Harvard—A cross between Prosperity and Maceo; color glowing crimson, just the Harvard color; size, three and one-half to four inches; calyx non-bursting; stiff stems, averaging thirty inches in length from early fall to spring. Has an exceptionally clean habit and is a free bloomer.

Georgia—A cross between Prosperity and Morning Glory; color, clear white; size, three and one-half to four inches; calyx does not burst; strong stems, twenty-four to thirty inches in length. An exceptional keeper, with a growth where every shoot produces a flower, and is very fragrant.

Faust—A cross between Maceo and Morning Glory; color, bright scarlet; size, two and one-half to three inches; strong calyx which will not burst; strong, stiff stem, two to three feet in length. A good, clean grower, producing flowers all the time.

About a month ago, Stevenson Bros., of Govanstown, Md., registered with this society a carnation under the name of Debutante. This registration was made early in the week, but in order that registrations may appear in all of the trade papers simultaneously, the secretary holds all registrations received during the week until Saturday, and they then appear the following week. On account of this delay of one week, another carnation appeared in print under the name of Debutante, although it was not registered with any society. This, of course, gave this carnation precedence in print, and as the owner thereof would not consent to change the name, Stevenson Bros. have kindly consented to change the name of theirs in order that there may be no confusion in the trade. They now register their carnation under the name of Splendor, a very pretty shade of pink, large flower, good calyx, stiff stem, extremely prolific and a grand keeper.

NEW RED HYBRID TEA ROSES.

One of the most promising of these is Grüss an Sangerhausen. This was raised in the establishment of that eminent rosarian, Dr. Müller, at Weingarten, in Wurtemburg, and was placed in commerce in 1904. From its behavior in my garden this season, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, it promises to sustain the already good reputation borne by the other productions of this raiser. Though classed as a hybrid tea, its habit and extremely floriferous character would lead one to suspect that it is a close relative of the Chinas, and this appears quite probable. The flowers are most deliciously scented, and their coloring—a pure reddish scarlet, without a suspicion of carmine or amaranth—far surpasses both that of Lady Battersea or Liberty in effect. The long, pointed buds are held on stiff, upright stalks, and open into perfectly shaped blossoms of moderate size. Not the least distinctive feature is the luxuriant foliage, which is a dark purplish green, and a fine contrast to the vivid hue of the flowers. It seems quite probable that when it has recovered from the effects of over-propagation it will develop more vigor.

POTTING THE CUTTINGS.

As soon as the cuttings have obtained roots half an inch in length they should be potted without delay. If the cuttings are allowed to stand in the cutting bench after they are ready for potting the roots begin to run in search of food and, finding nothing but water, they soon mature and become useless for the support of the young plant. When the roots attain such a large size they are always more or less destroyed in the operation of potting.

The soil for potting should be passed through a screen of half-inch mesh, so that the young rootlets may have a close bed of soil around them. The quality of soil to be used is of the utmost importance. It should be a good, friable loam with a little clay mixture, if possible, and with no fresh manure in it. The soil left over at planting time, if it has been properly cared for since, is in just the right condition for young stock.

Two-inch standard pots are large enough for a first potting. These pots should be clean outside and inside, especially inside, so that at repotting time the balls may be turned out without breaking. The roots should be so placed that when the soil is firmed around the plant they will be about one-third of the distance down the pot. The pot should not be filled flush, as this would leave no room for water.

The young stock should be thoroughly watered as soon as possible after potting. This operation usually requires to be repeated several times before the soil can be made uniformly moist and care should be taken not to reduce the soil to the condition of mud.

The plants should be moved into the house as soon as convenient and not be allowed to stand around the potting shed, where there always is more or less draught. Select a bench which is both light and airy and place a bed of ashes or some such material on the bottom to act as drainage.

Shade from bright sun for a few days, until root action has commenced, when they should be exposed to the full rays of the sun.

Care in watering, so that the soil may never become dry, and using the syringe freely twice a day during bright weather, keeping a steady night temperature of 56 degrees, with ordinary rose temperature during the day, will give them a sturdy and vigorous habit. Ribes.

ROSE RUBIN, OR RUBY?

Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, N. Y., furnishes the following translation from the Journal des Roses:

"In its issue for August 25, 1906, the Deutsche Gartner Zeitung, Erfurt, publishes a large illustration of the climbing rose Rubin, originated by J. C. Schmidt, Erfurt, Germany, and introduced in 1899. This climbing rose, which is very vigorous, is especially recommended for decorating pillars, as well as for quickly covering arbors. It is simply an improved variety of Crimson Rambler, with which it has much similarity; its flowers are a little larger and of a brighter red. These are the principal characteristics which distinguish it from Crimson Rambler.

"This rose is the variety which was exhibited as a novelty in 1905, in the rose division of the French National Horticultural Society, by Cayoux & Leclerc, seedsmen, Paris, under the erroneous name of Ruby.

"Why change further the already badly mixed nomenclature of roses? The first name of this sort is the one which should be retained for this climbing rose, whose purchase and planting are to be particularly recommended in high and cold regions because of its hardiness."

ASPARAGUS FALCATUS.

For florists's work, most cultivators find it more advantageous to plant out on staging, instead of on beds formed on the floor of the forcing house, some small amount of heat in the beds being obtained from two or three hot-water pipes underneath. With this method of cultivation the growth, both sprays and trailing shoots, will be of a lighter green tint than from plants in low beds, this tint being preferred by purchasers. Seedling plants, raised in the late spring months, which may be bought in the autumn at a cheap price, and potted in small pots, in which they are wintered, are to be preferred to divided stools, as the growth of the seedlings is very vigorous the next year.—Horticultural Advertiser.

We have been very well pleased with the paper.—B. C. Morris Floral Co., Salt Lake City, Utah.

CHRYSANTHEMUM CERAMIC.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph made at the establishment of Chal. Peterson, East Liverpool, O., and shows the type of flower of the variety Mr. Peterson says is his best money maker. It is a yellow sport of Queen, straw color, like the old Philadelphia, but with a glossy appearance, not the dry, hard, dull yellow so common to the flower. Mr. Peterson says it is the best keeper and best seller of all the mid-season mums he ever has grown. The lower petals do not droop against the stem and become unsightly, as in some otherwise good sorts. The foliage is heavy, growing well up to within four inches of the flower. Mr. Peterson grows two and three flowers to the plant and gets stems three to four feet long. This season he cut his first flower October 27 and the last November 24. Every flower was salable. He has named the variety Ceramic.

BEST EXHIBITION SORTS.

A Retrospect.

Now that the shows are over, one can size up the results and revise the list of best varieties to grow for exhibition purposes. That there would be some changes was to be expected, and as usual some of the older ones fell by the wayside. In the list I append, it will be noticed that only two of the older varieties appear. They are Colonel Appleton and Merza. These two seem to have a perennial lease of vigor and are hard to beat in their color. Between Beatrice May and Miss Clay Frick, Merza will not be needed after this year, perhaps, but where it shows up good it is still a grand thing. All growers may not agree entirely with my list as given, but it is compiled only after considerable study of such of the flower show notes as give list of prize winners, combined with my own experience, and correspondence with noted growers. Some good things in the French varieties I am not acquainted with, and must perforce pass them by, but if a grower is called on to stage forty varieties and puts up the ones I have named, in good shape, he will be bound to land in the money. My list is as follows:

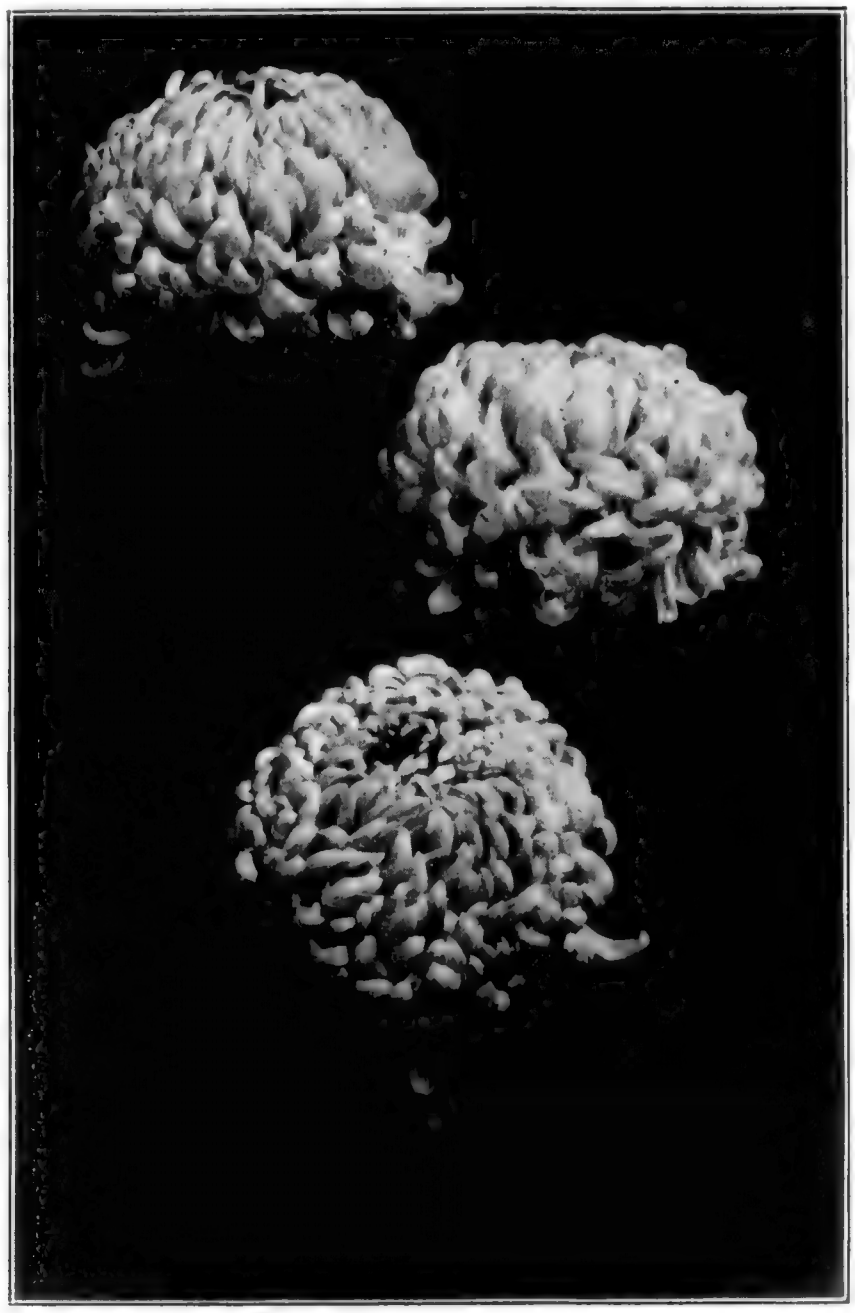
Yellow.—Col. Appleton, Mrs. Geo. Hunt, F. S. Vallis, Mrs. W. Duckham, Cheltoni, Chr. Montigny, Gen. Hutton, Mrs. E. Crossley and Mrs. W. Knox.

Pink.—W. Duckham, Miriam Hankey, Morton F. Plant, Lady Hopetoun, President Viger, Valerie Greenham, Leila Filkins and T. Richardson.

White.—Beatrice May, Miss Clay Frick, May Seddon, Mrs. D. V. West, Nellie Pockett, President Loubet, Mrs. F. F. Thompson, Ben Wells, Merza and W. Wells.

Crimson.—Mrs. H. Partridge, Mrs. A. H. Lee, Merstham Crimson, Merstham Red and S. T. Wright.

Odd Colors.—Mrs. A. J. Miller, Mrs. Henry Barnes, Mrs. John E. Dunne, Mrs. Geo. Heaume, E. J. Brooks, Mary Inglis, Mme. G. Rivol, D. McLeod and Ethel Fitzroy.



Looking over this list, one sees much of interest, not the least of which is the overwhelming preponderance of the Australian varieties. The reason for this has been discussed so much that it is unnecessary to more than mention it here, namely, similar climatic conditions. Three lone American varieties only are in this list, namely Appleton, Merza and Morton F. Plant. But there is comfort in the thought that if we have three, there is no reason why we can not have others. I think the time is not far distant when this will be changed, but it takes time. We were wedded to a commercial ideal so long that we are not yet rid of it. Several things shown this fall in seedlings are distinct breaks from the sameness, and it is only a matter of time, I believe, when we will be turning out our quota of good things.

The Yellows.

In the yellows, Mrs. Geo. Hunt is the only novelty. It is enormous in size, but must be taken on a crown bud in August, as later buds are deficient in petalage. Mrs. W. Duckham has shown up better than ever in many sections and is merely showing, now that it is generally distributed, what an all-round fine thing it is. In the face of some criticism, I have always maintained this and it is pleasant to have one's judgment vindicated. Hutton is really too tall a grower, but the flower is fine and the stem is stiff enough to satisfy the most captious critic.

Mrs. E. Crossley is not so well known, but it will push to the front. It is a variety I introduced last year, and shines more particularly in the short-vase class.

Chr. Montigny makes an immense bloom, but in a fall as warm as we had this year many of the first petals damp, which, having to be cut away, scale down the size of the flower. Mrs. Geo. Hunt will displace Montigny in time, in my belief. Mrs. Knox is somewhat necky, but a well finished flower of this variety, taken as a flower pure and simple, can not be beaten in form, size and finish by any variety on the boards. When it comes to staging on long stems, it's a different story, as the long neck will hang a little and the beauty of the variety is lost. Knox is a short-vase variety only, but a telling one in its place.

Chrysanthemum Ceramic.

The Pinks.

The pinks also show only one novelty, Miss Miriam Hankey, as I am careful to include only such varieties as I am absolutely sure of. This variety, as it behaved with me, is the king-pin of all the pinks we now have, making an immense flower and having ideal stem and foliage. Space forbids too much detailing, but Hankey is here to stay, unquestionably.

W. Duckham is so well known that comment is needless, but it is still holding its own in a remarkable manner. Strange that in some sections it shows such an eye.

Lady Hopetoun is purely an exhibition variety, as the stem can not hold the enormous flower erect, but as a front row flower in the short-vase classes, it will prove a winner every time. Morton F. Plant has not been the general success I could have wished, but it is a fine variety when studied out, and as a commercial flower I consider it fine, as even June struck cuttings produce fine flowers with me. It will be shown better next year.

Valerie Greenham is one of the largest blooms grown and also, unless handled right, one of the coarsest. The bud should not be taken before September 1, as earlier buds have a poor color and produce a ragged flower. Catch it right as to bud, and Greenham is all right. President Viger is a French variety that I never grew in quantity before this year, but it is a great and good variety in the Japanese section. The flower is immense and foliage and stem correspond.

Leila Filkins is holding its own very well and has been exhibited in splendid shape this year. T. Richardson has also been shown finely this year. The color, being a delicate shell pink, is too light to permit of setting up this variety in the ordinary pink class. It must be shown either in the collections or in a class for light pink.

The Whites.

The whites are now getting strong again. Beatrice May has been shown almost everywhere, and invariably fine. This chrysanthemum is a record-breaker in every sense of the word. The foliage is poor, being mottled with white and twisting up some, but that is its only fault. In common with Mrs. Jerome Jones, and other splendid whites in their day, Beatrice May comes a pinkish hue on late buds, but I cannot see that this hurts it any. One particular case I know the flowers came a good pink, but that is an exceptional case, due to some local condition of the soil or feeding.

Miss Clay Frick, as the white Duckham is now called, will make its mark next year in the exhibitions. Stem and foliage are precisely similar to the pink Duckham. A percentage of my flowers were a delicate blush, instead of pure white, but that I believe was due to my own fault in using a strong solution of ammonia to feed the plants after the flowers showed color. I feel safe in saying that this variety will be absolutely pure white with the majority of growers. The flower seems to finish better than the pink variety, the ones set up in Chicago being especially noticeable in this respect.

Mrs. D. V. West was late this year and was missed from some of the earlier shows, but when it did come it made up for itself. If West only had an Eaton stem, it would be a splendid thing.

Nellie Pockett still holds on. I saw it particularly fine at Redbank, and when set up as it was there it is a hard one to beat.

Mrs. F. F. Thompson has a long, bare neck and fits in best in the short-vase classes, or where artificial supports are permitted. Some growers do not like it on this account, but the flower itself, when well done, is so strikingly distinct and beautiful that it is well worth a place.

May Seddon has appeared as the largest flower in the show at several places, and will be more largely grown next year. It is a slow grower and should be got under way early in the season. Cuttings rooted in January and grown right along were not over three feet high at flowering time. It will on this account stand more nitrogenous food than most other varieties.

President Loubet, if we can all grow it as it was staged before the New York committee, will be a cracker-jack. Once in a great while we get a French variety that comes to stay like M. Carnot or Chr. Montigny, but they are not numerous.

W. Wells has been fine in several places and seems to have established itself. It is a grand, strong grower, but seems prone to red spider in most localities, and needs close watching during the summer.

Odd Colors.

In the odd colors, perhaps the finest is Mrs. John E. Dunne. This variety has done well all over the country—better possibly in the vicinity of New York than elsewhere. The color is peculiar, being old-rose streaked with bronze. It is a most effective variety and does not have a single fault.

Mrs. A. J. Miller was fine everywhere. The color is variable and it has won prizes as a red, bronze and several other colors this year, but whatever color it was shown in, it seemed to capture the money. Miller is a first-class variety.

E. J. Brooks has done well also. It is a purple crimson variety. Here and there it has shown an eye, but not when properly grown and the crown bud caught right. It is hard to see any faults in Brooks.

Mrs. George Heaume has found many admirers. The color is unique, being a salmon overlaid with bronze, and the effect is really very beautiful. Not the least of Heaume's virtues is the fact that every bud makes a perfect flower. There is no loss with it whatever. It will produce more high grade flowers than any other variety I ever grew.

Mme. G. Rivol came a deep yellow with me last year, and I sent it out as a yellow. This year it is all colors, from bronze to cherry red. It has been said that the chief charm of the mum is "its infinite variety." This being the case, Rivol is a variety show in itself, for hardly any two flowers are exactly alike.

Donald McLeod comes pure yellow on an early crown, but is a beautifully striped flower on a late crown. McLeod must be caught on a crown, as the terminal bud produces a flower that is almost useless.

Inglis and Fitzroy are well known and need little comment. The last named is the finest bronze we have, but the stem is brittle and it needs careful handling.

The Crimsons.

In the crimsons, I place Mrs. H. Partridge as first. It never damps and is an all-round good thing. I have not heard one grower run it down. Any bud is good and growth and other essentials leave nothing to be desired.

Mrs. A. H. Lee is somewhat the same in this respect, but a shade deeper in color than Partridge. Lee does not have so wide a petal, but is more reflexing.

Merstham Crimson is the deepest in color, shading sometimes almost to black, but any variety that shades to this color will burn, and one can not feed but very little; consequently the flower is smaller.

S. T. Wright is still fine, but it must be struck late, and does best grown in small pots. Any attempt to get it big only ends in failure.

Merstham Red shades more to red than crimson and may be relied on every year to come to time.

There are other varieties, of course, but this list will hold its own in any company. Charles H. Totty.

LARGEST BLOOMS.

Will you please tell me, through your columns, which are the largest mums, in the different colors, that will bloom by November 15? Also tell me if Minnie Wanamaker can be brought in by October 20. What is the best time to make mum cuttings? I. M. P.

A list of just the largest flowers would run about as follows:

Yellow—F. S. Vallis, Mrs. E. Thirkell, Mrs. Geo. Hunt and General Hutton.

White—Beatrice May, Mrs. D. V. West, May Seddon and Mrs. F. F. Thompson.

Pink—Valerie Greenham, Morton F. Plant, Lady Hopetoun and Wm. Duckham.

Crimson—Mrs. H. Partridge, Mrs. A. H. Lee and S. T. Wright.

Odd Colors—Mrs. John E. Dunne, Mrs. A. J. Miller, Mrs. Geo. Heaume and Mary Inglis.

Size alone is not the only desirable thing for exhibition. Color, form, stem and other points all count. I. M. P. will find good information on this point in my list of varieties given in this issue. Many fine exhibition varieties are not suitable for commercial growing.

Cuttings may be rooted in February, March or April, or even as late as June for ordinary commercial cultivation.

Exhibitors who try to get their flowers as large as possible propagate mostly in February or March.

Minnie Wanamaker used to be classed as a late with us, though we discarded it years ago. It is possible to bring it in, I have no doubt, by planting early and getting a good crown bud.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Work of the Committees.

New York, December 1.—Mlle. Jeanne Rosette, rose-pink and silver reverse, Japanese incurved, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., scored ninety points commercial scale.

Philadelphia, December 1.—Mlle. Jeanne Rosette, rose-pink, Japanese incurved, exhibited by E. G. Hill Co., scored eighty-six points commercial and eighty-seven points exhibition scale.

Cincinnati, December 1.—Mlle. Jeanne Rosette, pink, Japanese incurved, exhibited by E. G. Hill Co., scored ninety points commercial scale and ninety-one points exhibition scale.

Philadelphia, November 26.—Sport of T. Eaton, white, Japanese incurved, exhibited by J. S. Stremler, Princeton, Ky., scored eighty-one points commercial scale.

In a note from A. B. Cartledge, chairman of the Philadelphia committee, he states: "The variety shown was so entirely different from Eaton we wondered if the raiser could have been mistaken in any way." I wrote to Mr. Stremler and in reply he says he found the variety in 1904 among his Eatons and does not know where it came from, except it be a sport of Eaton. He sent two flowers to the E. G. Hill Co., who said they thought it was Mrs. Jerome Jones. Would the E. G. Hill Co. please give their views in the matter?

TABLE DECORATION.

The illustration on page 154 is from a photograph made at the Toronto exhibition early in November and shows a dinner table decoration by John H. Dunlop. It was an oval table, with the center-piece and candelabra at the ends. The center-piece was of cattleyas and Asparagus plumosus. Strings of asparagus on the board led out to points between the plates. The corsage bouquets also were cattleyas.

on several occasions, and while he had no aspirations for a higher one, his many friends felt that one who had been a loyal worker so long was entitled to the highest office.

Mr. Westwood, like so many more gardeners, is a Scotchman, and a native of Kirkcaldy. For quite a number of years he has been in charge of the beautiful Forest Hills cemetery, where bedding out is always well done. The club is bound to prosper under Mr. Westwood's guidance.

SEEDSMEN'S COLLECTION BUREAU

FACILITIES OFFERED FLORISTS.

History of the Bureau.

With a view to improving the markedly bad credit conditions existing in the seed trade some years ago, the Wholesale Seedsmen's League, in 1901, established a credit bureau; a department which they intended should be to the seed trade in its entirety a protective-credit, mercantile and collection agency; one which should be maintained, if need be, at an expense to themselves, and which should be conducted entirely for the furtherance of the interests of the members of the seed and allied trades. It was designed that this bureau should handle as a collection agency all the bad accounts contracted by the members of the league, should keep a record of the undesirable buyers who do not pay their bills, and should at stated intervals report to the trade their names as a warning against taking on business with them.

This, then, was the inception of the present Bureau of Credit of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League, a bureau that has now for five years worked untiringly in the interests of the trade, and which has proved itself to be a most valuable adjunct to every firm privileged to make use of its facilities.

While in the beginning the Bureau of Credit was intended to limit its operations to the members of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League, it proved to be such a practical help to the members of that organization that the advisability was discussed of extending its operations to embrace that portion of the seed trade not represented in the membership of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League. This move was thought so well of that in 1903 the directors of the league brought the bureau and its work to the notice of the American Seed Trade Association, inviting the members of that body to make use of its facilities. The advantages were so plainly manifest to the officers of the American Seed Trade Association that they promptly accepted the offer and took the steps necessary to admit their membership to the use of the bureau's services. That was some three years ago, since when the bureau has worked for members of both the Wholesale Seedsmen's League and the American Seed Trade Association, covering through their combined membership practically the whole seed trade.

Florists Membership Suggested.

Now, it has long impressed the di-

This paper is by W. S. Powell, of Boston, who addressed the Society of American Florists at the Dayton convention, but whose remarks, because of the lateness of the hour, did not occasion the discussion the importance of the subject seems to demand. Mr. Powell is manager of the Bureau of Credit of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League.

rectors of the league that this system, which has proved such a decided success in the seed trade, ought with equal success to be extended to embrace the allied florists' trade, and to work just as satisfactorily for them as it does for the seedsmen; that its work covering both of these somewhat related trades ought to make it more valuable to the members of each. And in this connection I may say that the matter also has been discussed with officers of the American Association of Nurserymen, and it is hoped that at no far distant date the bureau will have the coöperation of that trade. Then, with the acceptance of the suggestion that ought to be made, it will thoroughly and comprehensively cover the whole of the affiliated lines of florists, seedsmen and nurserymen.

The suggestion which I speak of as relating to the florists is an invitation which the Wholesale Seedsmen's League is about to extend to the Society of American Florists, and through it as an organization to its members individually, to become active users of and coworkers with the Bureau of Credit of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League; to make fullest use of its various departments, for the collection of overdue accounts and for the prevention of unsatisfactory ones; for the adjustment of business controversies when its services can be of assistance; and as a florists' mercantile agency, just as it now acts as a seedsmen's mercantile agency.

How Collections Are Made.

As the workings of the Bureau of Credit are unfamiliar to most of the members of the S. A. F. it may not be amiss to say a few words in general explanation of them. Perhaps the first and most important province of the bureau is as a trade collection agency. A brief outline of its collection methods will, I am sure, show why the bureau has proved to be the most thorough, most economical and by far the most effective collection agency in operation today:

The first step the bureau takes with a debtor is to notify him that unless he pays the overdue account within a specified time his name will be reported to the firms whose names appear on the back of that notification sheet, and that those firms will refuse to sell to him except for cash until the debt is settled and his name reinstated. On the back of this letter appear at present the names of the members of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League and the American Seed Trade Association, which means practically the whole seed trade; to which list will be added the membership of the S. A. F. if favorable action is taken on the suggestion which the league makes. This notification shows a debtor that unless he pays up promptly he is without credit in the trade, as every important firm in the trade will be made acquainted with his non-payment. Such a condition is, of course, disastrous to any man who intends to stay in business, and even the hardiest debtor is quick to realize the importance of satisfactorily adjusting the debt then before him, for which he knows he will be reported if he does not pay. In addition to this purely business reason for paying an account so discussed, there is in every man a moral objection to being made known to a whole trade as a man who refuses to pay his honest debts; who is to be avoided as a customer and not to be trusted; and this purely psychological effect of the bureau's demand letter has in more than one case been sufficient to bring settlement from a man who was absolutely uncollectible by any legal process.

The fee on collection made through the demand letter and resulting correspondence is five per cent of the amount collected, or just one-half of what is charged by any other reputable collection agency. When one considers that fifty per cent of the dead accounts which the bureau collects are gotten through this department, he can see what a saving to members this means.

In addition to the demand department the bureau maintains a fully equipped attorney's department; for, as potent as is the demand letter and its followers, it is frequently necessary to resort to more drastic measures. When a debtor fails to reply satisfactorily to the demand letter the member is notified of the fact and advised that with his consent the case will be put in the attorney's department, which will have an attorney at the debtor's place act vigorously, not, however, entering actual suit or incurring expense without specific authority. Through the attorney's department of the bureau any account which is collectible by any legal process is collected at the minimum of expense to the member.

The fees for collecting through the attorney's department vary from five per cent to ten per cent of the amount collected, depending upon the size of the claim. All collection fees, however, are entirely contingent, no charges being entered where an actual collection is not made.

To sum up in a few words: I am sure that every one who is familiar with the work of the Bureau of Credit will agree that as a trade mercantile and protective credit agency it is in advance of any movement there is in operation today. Five years of actual work among the seedsmen have proved conclusively its superiority to any other collection system; and there isn't any doubt that the movement will work just as successfully and advantageously among the florists, whose interests are allied to the seedsmen's. The florists' trade needs such an organization just as much as did the seed trade before the establishment of the present bureau, and the bureau is willing to offer its splendid facilities to the florists to fill that need. The bureau is thoroughly organized, legally incorporated under the laws of the state of West Virginia, with a special provision in its charter to conduct a full mercantile and collection agency, and by reason of its covering of the combined field of florists, seed growers and seed dealers, can work more effectually for the florists than would even a like bureau organized in this particular trade, limiting its scope to just the one line of business.

How Florists May Participate.

Before the individual members of the S. A. F. can avail themselves of the Bureau of Credit it will be necessary for the society as such to go through the formality of becoming a member of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League. This formality is easily arranged. The one expense the society would be put to would be yearly dues of $25 as a stockholder of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League. After the action outlined had been taken the members of the S. A. F. would be entitled to the use of the bureau with full privileges of all its departments, those so desiring receiving the notification sheets of delinquent, undesirable and unworthy buyers in both the florists' and seed trade, having at their disposal the mercantile agency facilities of the bureau for obtaining special reports on concerns desiring credit at their hands. Each member so making use of the bureau, and receiving its benefits, would be asked to subscribe $10 per year toward the actual expenses of maintaining the bureau; which, being conducted on co-operative lines, is not self-supporting. This is exactly the arrangement under which the Bureau of Credit works with the members of the American Seed Trade Association, and which has proved so eminently satisfactory to them. I might say here that the balance of the expense of maintaining the bureau above these subscriptions and collection fees is borne by the members of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League and amounts to considerably more than $10 per year for each member.

The Present Sponsers.

In closing I would call your attention especially to the fact that the Bureau of Credit is distinctively a trade factor, vouched for by the most important firms in the seed trade. Take for instance its present board of directors: F. W. Bruggerhoff, president J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York; Charles H. Breck, president Joseph Breck & Sons, Boston; Jerome B. Rice, of J. B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y.; W. Atlee Burpee, of W. A. Burpee & Co., Philadelphia; Burnett Landreth, of D. Landreth Seed Co., Bristol, Pa.; L. L. May, of L. L. May & Co., St. Paul, Minn.; S. F. Willard, of Comstock, Ferre & Co., Wethersfield, Conn.; Albert McCullough, of J. M. McCullough Sons Co., Cincinnati.

I am sure the fact that the bureau is under the direct supervision of these men will sufficiently indicate its character and that steps soon will be taken to bring about co-operation between all branches of the trade. In fact, I feel sure that the facilities of the bureau thus being open to the florists will be an added inducement to florists doing a wholesale business to keep up their membership in the S. A. F.

ROMNEYA COULTERI.

Those who are not conversant with Romneya Coulteri should lose no time in procuring it, choosing a suitable site, and growing it well. It is the magnificence of its blossoms individually rather than the number it produces at one time that renders the plant so interesting, and blooms seven inches in diameter are common on vigorous plants. The pure white, crinkled petals, set off in the center by a deep yellow mass of anthers, have a pleasing appearance, and like all poppies, the blooms suddenly burst into full beauty, especially during a bright morning. The perfume, too, is distinct and pleasing, quite different from the ordinary aroma emitted by the papaver family.

Plants should be procured established in pots, as they are impatient of root disturbance; turn them out carefully, and do not plant too deep, pressing the soil firmly about the roots and keeping it moist until growth is fairly on the way, when abundance of moisture, both over the leaves after a hot day and at the roots will create a luxuriant growth, without which it is useless to expect good flowers.

Mulchings of horse manure aid growth by feeding the roots and conserving moisture. The branches will need some support either by securing them to the wall or by stakes, the latter being probably the best way to preserve the natural bushy form of growth.—Gardeners' Magazine.

OBITUARY.

Albert Zimmerman.

Albert Zimmerman, of Pasadena, Cal., died on the train while traveling in southern Arizona. He was, in company with his wife, returning from Tucson, where they had been for some time, hoping to get relief for Mr. Zimmerman, who has long been a sufferer from lung trouble. The funeral was held from his late residence, Sunday, November 25, and was largely attended by his former associates and friends.

Mr. Zimmerman was the superintendent of parks in Pasadena for years. His host of friends mourn his loss, as he was an able, industrious student of nature and a noble, kind-hearted man.

George Ellwanger.

George Ellwanger, senior member of the firm of Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, whose reputation as a horticulturist and nurseryman was international, died November 26, aged 90 years.

George Ellwanger was born at Gross-Heppach, in Wurtemberg, Germany, December 2, 1816. The place of his nativity was one of the grape producing valleys of that region. It was there that his youth was spent and there he laid the foundation for his long and useful career in the domain of fruits and flowers. Recognizing his natural tastes his parents placed him for five years in a leading horticultural establishment at Stuttgart, where he perfected his knowledge of horticulture and landscape gardening.

Mr. Ellwanger came to the United States in 1835. He first went to Tiffin, O., but soon located at Rochester. He first entered the establishment of Reynolds & Bateham, whom he bought out in 1839. Mr. Ellwanger spared no pains or expense in procuring the choicest stock, and he applied from the outset those methods of sterling integrity which made for the great celebrity quickly attained by the Mount Hope Nurseries and gained for them a reputation throughout the world which has been maintained in all of the intervening years. In the year 1840 Mr. Ellwanger formed a business partnership with the late Patrick Barry, which continued until Mr. Barry's death in 1890.

It would be difficult to overestimate the importance of Mr. Ellwanger's influence on the horticultural interests of not only western New York, but of the entire United States. No other person in the country has introduced so many new varieties of trees and plants as Mr. Ellwanger. Among the many innovations which he introduced were dwarf apple and pear trees, and he introduced among many other celebrated varieties of fruits the Northern Spy apple. He also literally revolutionized methods of pruning fruit trees, applying scientific processes which have now been universally adopted.

It is probable that to George Ellwanger more than to any other individual Rochester is indebted for its material prosperity, for the value of the industry which he established is beyond computation. Great as is the industry with which his name will be ever connected, it was not alone to horticulture and kindred subjects that he gave his attention. He was prominently connected with the early and late fortunes of the Flower City. He was president of the Ellwanger & Barry Nursery Co. and the Ellwanger & Barry Realty Co., first vice-president of the Reynolds Library and vice-president of the Powers Hotel Co. He was a director in five banks and intimately connected with other commercial institutions. He was one of the promoters of the first street railway and was also closely identified with and a director of the Eastman Co. He was a life member of the American Pomological Society, the New York State Agricultural Society and the Western New York Horticultural Society, and was a corresponding member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

His benefactions have been munificent and during all of his long and active life he was interested in every movement which made for the betterment of Rochester and its citizens. It will not be forgotten that the firm of Ellwanger & Barry gave to Rochester Highland park.

Although Mr. Ellwanger's business life was active and engrossing, he always found time for culture and extensive reading. It was Mr. Ellwanger's custom until about four or five years ago to celebrate his birthday by having a gathering of his friends, to whom he gave a reception and banquet. Although his mind remained clear, he was something of an invalid during the last few years, and only immediate relatives came to observe his birthday at his Mount Hope avenue home.

Mr. Ellwanger was a communicant of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church. In 1846 he married a daughter of General Mical Brooks, one of the pioneers of western New York. Mrs. Ellwanger died about two years ago. Of his four sons, three are deceased. William D. Ellwanger is a resident of Rochester.

George Ellwanger.

DISEASE OF REX BEGONIAS.

The cultivation of the Rex begonias is not so general as was formerly the case, notwithstanding the few difficulties attending it; and moreover, the plants have suffered from the infestation of a mite which, if its ravages are unchecked, disfigures the leaves and main ribs, and checks expansion of the leaf. According to a writer in a German gardening journal of recent date, these minute creatures first infest the folded-up young leaves, and call attention to their presence in the rusty-brown galleries or borings, and the crippled appearance of the plant. These affected leaves and points must be removed; and as soon as a renewal of growth takes place the plant is not further liable to attack, unless as a consequence of a check, or exposure to a dry atmosphere. Other species of begonia suffer equally with the Rex varieties, as B. ricinifolia, B. metallica, etc. Good ventilation, warmth, and moisture producing freedom of growth are said to be conditions unfavorable to infestation.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Plant Registration.

The Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., submits for registration Canna New York (C. & J. Seedling No. 1549). Height six to seven feet, with broad, bronze leaves and mammoth flowers of intense carmine. W. J. Stewart, Sec'y.

A FEW FIGURES.

The white paper consumed in printing the November issues of the Review weighed just 22,200 pounds, or eleven and one-tenth tons. If the sheets of paper had been laid upon the ground, their edges touching, they would have covered just 1,221,166 5-6 square feet, or a little over twenty-seven and one-half acres. If the sheets had been laid end to end as they came from the press it would have made a strip of paper twenty-four and three-quarters inches wide and 112 1-5 miles long. If the completed copies had been stacked one upon another it would have made a pile 422 feet high, or half again as high as a twenty-story office building.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Transportation Charges.

Will you allow us a little space in your valuable paper for what we consider the good of the trade? Of late there has been much said in regard to express rates, of which we have no little trouble. In four out of five shipments that come to us the rate is too high, but the express is not all. We find that the railroads are just as eager to charge double rates and collect them if they can. We have recently had goods come to us that should be classed under, and the classified rate book so states, fourth-class, yet they billed them double first-class. Now this occurs often and it is not because the transportation company does not know better, but because they try to get all they can, while we may do the best we can to obtain relief.

We would suggest that every house doing a shipping business see to it that all goods sent out be forwarded under the lowest class possible, and have the class so specified plainly on the bill of lading. There are many houses, some of which we deal with, which simply dump the goods at the depot and say nothing about class and take the bill of lading for same. Of course, that is just the bill of lading of the railroads. It is then their business to bill them under the highest possible class. In this fast age it behooves us as florists to look out for one another.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

"Congress appropriated $1,175,690 for the maintenance of the department of agriculture for the year ended June 30, 1906. This was $1,081,150 more than the appropriation for the preceding year. For the current year (ending June 30, 1907) congress appropriated $9,210,440 for the regular work of the department. The increase is chiefly due to the broadening of the meat inspection. For that service the permanent appropriation is $3,000,000. The estimated revenues of $700,000 from sales of products of the forests reserves and $780,934.68 available for the new buildings bring the total amount to be disbursed by this department during the current year up to $10,691,374.68.

"The number of persons on the rolls of the department of agriculture on July 1, 1906, was, outside of Washington, 4,648; in Washington, 1,594; total, 6,242, showing an increase during the year of 796. Of the total number, more than 1,800 have been on the rolls for six years or longer. In the classified service 917 were promoted in salary and class, and 403 resigned.

"The act approved February 9, 1903, authorizing an appropriation of $1,500,000 for segments of a new building, made possible the beginning of the construction of suitable quarters for the accommodation of the department. The work has now progressed, with the exception of the interior finish, to approximately the fourth-floor line, and it is probable that the roof will be on before the winter season. The roofing and closing in will allow the interior work to be carried on during the winter without interruption, which, without unforeseen complications, will insure the completion of operations within the contract time—namely, November 14, 1907.

"The estimated growth of the department, made at the time the appropriation for the new building was approved, has been greatly exceeded. This rapid increase will require other segments of the proposed buildings to be constructed before the department will have sufficient and suitable accommodations for its work and before the large amount paid annually for rentals can be substantially decreased."

CHINESE PRIMROSES.

Will you please tell me whether Chinese primroses will seed early enough for next spring's sowing if they are in bud and bloom now? Will they fertilize themselves without bees to carry the pollen? In what temperature and under what general conditions should plants be kept? C. F. M.

To answer the first question, we say that if they are in full bloom now you can have the seed ripe by the last part of May or middle of June, and that is as early as desirable for sowing primulas. The principal observance in saving seed of the primula in the dark days of winter is to put the plants on a shelf where the atmosphere is dry, where they will get every passing ray of sunshine and a free circulation of air. On a bench but a few feet from the ground you will have poor results.

A little artificial fertilizing of the flowers will help. If you want new colors in the flowers, then, with a clean and dry camel's-hair brush, remove the pollen of one variety to the stigma of another flower and if you want your plants to be prolific in seed-bearing, introduce the pollen of the florets to the stigma. Look over your plants every morning and perform this little operation. Above all, keep your seed-bearing plants up near the glass. Plants bearing fruit or seed will always show signs of decay earlier than those bearing no seeds, which is a law of nature, proving that reproduction is the greatest of life's functions. As the plants show a ripening of foliage and loss of chlorophyl, withhold water gradually until the seedpods are ripe and pick off each ripe seedpod as soon as ripe, or it may burst open and scatter its seeds where you cannot find them. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

By Monday of this week the market already was feeling the revival consequent upon the departure of the chrysanthemum. Not that there are no more mums, for considerable quantities still are to be marketed, but comparatively speaking their season is over. There are quantities of small, weak stock, but nothing like such an avalanche as came in a week ago. Really good mums now are hard to find and it looks as though the late sorts will bring equally as good prices as prevailed during the first month of the mum season. During the height of the season prices certainly have been in the buyers' favor.

The increase in the demand for roses was most welcome, for nearly all growers are beginning to cut in large quantity. The report is that from now on until after Christmas big crops may be expected. The cut is increasing on all varieties, including Beauty, but with the possible exception of Liberty, which is giving place to Richmond. The quality has suffered because of the long period of dark weather, and Maids are badly bleached, but it will only take a few crisp days with bright sun to make rose qualities all the most critical could ask.

Since Thanksgiving there have been plenty of carnations. The stock carried over from Thanksgiving served to keep the market going until the growers had rested up and begun to cut again. The result is that prices are more nearly normal than they have been at any time this season. The quality with many growers is superb, although quite a number have not yet been able to get much stem on Lawson. Enchantress is fine with nearly everyone, Paper Whites and Romans are plentiful. There are enough lilies, both Harrisii and calla, and valley is again down in price because of increased supply. Violets were scarce at the end of last week, but beginning with Monday there have been all the market could use. Mignonette and stevia are now regular items of stock. Green goods of all kinds are abundant.

Thanksgiving Aftermath.

Now that the returns are all in it appears that the aggregate sales were just about equal to last year—which was the best ever—and that the dissatisfaction which exists was caused by the unusually heavy supplies. The great quantities of stock seeking a market at advanced prices precluded a clean-up. Quiet business for three weeks before Thanksgiving and the expectation of a heavy demand for flowers to go with the turkey afforded the best of conditions for accumulating stock. Receipts were double, treble, even quadruple what they were the week before, and naturally the market appeared weak, although a volume of business equal to any previous year was being done.

Carnations were carried over in large quantities and even New York violets, of which receipts were not especially heavy, were carried from Wednesday until Saturday.

The Mum Glut Did It.

In sizing up recent business in the wide territory that draws supplies from the Chicago market, E. C. Amling says:

"Demand was active in October. Since November 6 the Chicago market has had supplies of chrysanthemums so heavy that they constantly were forcing a sale. From all reports the same thing has been true in every town from Pittsburg to Omaha, from Duluth to New Orleans. Every man who has any glass at all was loaded up with mums. Naturally he pushed them to his trade instead of pushing Chicago roses and carnations. In spite of this most of the Chicago wholesalers had a fairly satisfactory November. I look for a big boom in business as soon as the mums are out of the way."

Christmas Prospects.

With Christmas less than three weeks away all eyes are set upon the prospects for the holiday. Everything goes to show that the demand will be big—but supplies of stock will be large and growers are warned against accumulating stock at the expense of quality. Christmas buyers want only the best and will not buy stale stock at any price. Rose crops are about right, with favorable weather, for big Christmas crops. Carnations will be in large supply. The Chicago market will be fixed to do business for Christmas.

Hit By a Train.

Ferdinand Kading, who was a packer at the greenhouses of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, was instantly killed Thanksgiving eve while walking on the St. Paul tracks, returning from a dance at Glen View, which he had attended with Robert Hand, one of the section foreman. They were struck by a freight

The Young Funeral.

The funeral of Otto Young on Sunday and the interment on Monday made much work for the leading retailers. C. A. Samuelson had the family order, which was the largest he has been called upon to handle since the Field funeral. So widely was Mr. Young connected with Chicago business affairs that practically all the retailers had a share in the funeral work, some of the pieces shown being among the largest and most expensive turned out in this city in many months. Rowe made a pillow using 3,000 violets, a large quantity of valley, and four dozen cattleyas. The entire drawing-room of the Young residence at 2032 Calumet avenue was occupied by the floral display.

Weather in November.

The weather continues unseasonably warm, November averaging 3 degrees above normal. We have now had, figuring on the daily mean temperature, 928 degrees more heat in 1906 than normal. In November there were only four clear days, eleven partly cloudy and fifteen cloudy. The rainfall was 3.08 inches, or 1.03 inches more than November in 1905.

Various Notes.

The transportation question is occupying the thoughts of all Chicago. The congestion is testing the public temper. In the city council it is the principal topic of debate. Alderman Peter Reinberg suggests improving conditions by building bridges at La Salle and Franklin streets and establishing two more downtown loops.

George Manos, who has a stand at the Union depot, is a partner in Manos & Laskey at the Union depot at Pittsburg, Pa.

Ned Washburn, son of C. L. Washburn, is at home from Madison, where he is taking the horticultural course in the State Agricultural College. During the holiday rush he will acquire a knowledge of the business side of practical floriculture, in the city store of Bassett & Washburn.

C. M. Dickinson is on deck again at E. H. Hunt's, feeling first rate after seven weeks' siege with rheumatism.

Sinner Bros. are cutting Harrisii in considerable quantities, still rather short stems but fine flowers.

L. Baumann & Co. are experiencing the full force of the freight congestion. They have thirty cases of Christmas supplies mixed up in the freight blockade between New York and Chicago.

A. L. Randall Co. reports the supply department working overtime with increased force to keep the Christmas orders going out promptly.

Peter Reinberg's cut of Mrs. Marshall Field rose has become quite heavy and the color of the buds is much improved since cool weather came.

The latest novelty with Vaughan & Sperry is ivy sprays.

Wietor Bros. report that they are about through with the mums, and they say it with regret, for they have had an exceptionally good season with them.

The wire department of the Kennicott Bros. Co. has been turning out some large orders for rings for the making of holly wreaths. The early shipments of holly are of fine quality.

According to report, the sales from the Guardian Angel's Orphan Asylum greenhouses last year were $14,000. It is one of the chief sources of revenue of the institution.

Weiland & Risch say they are just beginning to get a good cut, having been late in replanting last summer. They have a large part of the place in Killarney.

Emil Kroll is cutting some exceptionally good Liberty. Zech & Mann handle the stock.

The club is due to meet next week, Thursday, December 13, at Handel hall, at 8 p. m.

August Poehlmann says that they are taking all the wood possible for the propagation of their sport of Chatenay, as they consider it an exceptionally good thing.

The E. F. Winterson Co. reports the trade taking strongly to artificial poinsettias. They are useful in combination with wreaths and for places where natural flowers would not stand.

P. C. Schupp, at J. A. Budlong's, says that every day they are better pleased with their grafted roses. They have a splendid crop just coming on.

Cattleya Percivaliana is about the only resource just now, and commands high prices. Trianæ is just beginning, and, McKellar says, is in big demand.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. says that Killarney will be at its best with them

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Thanksgiving business proved a surprise. While we were expecting good business, we were scarcely prepared for the great rush that came on Wednesday. The quantity of flowers that was handled in this city on that day was undoubtedly greater by far than that handled on any other similar occasion. Tuesday it looked as if there would be scarcely any extra trade, but Wednesday showed all that they were mistaken. Through it all prices did not advance to any great extent. There was some stiffening on carnations and Beauties, but outside of that the general run of prices prevailed. This fact tended to increase the business, as Thanksgiving is especially the day of the small buyer taking home a few flowers for the dinner-table or a vase or two about the house. Altogether we have every reason to be well pleased with the business done, and from all reports it was generally distributed, so that all had a share of it.

The days of the mum are now numbered, and after the great quantities that we have handled this year we are glad to see them go. As a general thing the chrysanthemum sold well this season, and, though it might be said that the prices obtained for them did not average quite as high as former years, still I do not believe that any one will be inclined to kick. It is a fact that in this market there were fewer mums thrown away this year than is usual. All blooms found a buyer at some price, and while at times the price was low, still they were not a total loss. We will still have mums, more or less, until after the holidays, but there will be no oversupply of them. Those that come in from now on will be sold at good prices; in fact the man who has the late mums is usually the man who makes the money. At this writing there is not a mum to be had on this market. The retailers have been scouring the various wholesale

Buyers whose trade does not call for extra long, select stock will please remember that no matter how high a grower's average quality may be, a certain part of the cut is bound to be medium to short. Our reputation for producing the best stock in the West is so well established that buyers naturally come to us for Fancy, but some forget that we are equally well able to supply their less exacting needs; in fact, we have an especially attractive proposition for regular buyers of medium grade stock. houses until everything that looks like a mum has been bought up, and many orders have been placed for future delivery.

Roses are still coming in large quantities, but with the mums out of the way they will begin to sell as they ought to. Already the better qualities have advanced sharply. Red roses are not plentiful and sell well. Carnations have increased in numbers, but there are scarcely enough to take care of the demand. Some fine ones are being handled by the wholesale houses. Violets continue to be scarce, the demand for them much in excess of the supply. Single ones bring the highest prices.

It looks now as if we were in for a spell of wintry weather. This being the case, we can look for a shortening up of all kinds of stock and a consequent sharp raise in prices.

Various Notes.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Society will be held in the club rooms, Saturday, December 8, at 8 p. m. It is expected that there will be a large number of the members present, as several subjects of importance to the craft will be brought up.

Harry Mormon, who is with Julius Baer, sustained a painful injury while putting up a decoration in a church. While assisting in the moving of a heavy object he strained his back.

Frank Ball has rented a room on the second floor at 31 East Third street and will try his hand at making wire designs for the trade. We wish him his full share of success.

E. Fulle, of Richmond, Ind., was a caller. He has been shipping some fine yellow and white Eaton. C. J. OHMER.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Thanksgiving day and all of the week trade was reported good by some; others say it was not so good as they expected. Still, as a whole it can safely be reported about the same as last year. The weather was just right for the retail trade. Some of the shippers to this market resorted to the same old trick of pickling stock, but these were set aside for the last sales of the day and did not bring much. Some growers will never learn to ship stock as they have it at this time of the year, as prices were good all during the week.

Stock at the wholesale houses is plentiful in all grades. Chrysanthemums are nearly at an end, and only a few of the late varieties are coming in. The demand for them at Thanksgiving was large, but since then it has fallen off considerably. The supply in roses is heavy in the first and second grades. Extra fancy always are in demand, and these are limited. The same may be said of Beauties. Carnations are in heavy demand, and fine quality of stock is coming in. Enchantress and Craig are fine; so are Boston Market and Lady Bountiful. Lawsons come brittle and with short stems. California violets were up to $1.50 per hundred last week, but are down to half of that price this week. Romans and Paper Whites are as yet scarce. Some good stevia is obtainable, also extra fine lily of the valley. Common ferns are up to 20 cents per hundred. Other greens same as usual. Holly and green have made their appearance in the market, with price on green away up. Downtown business houses have started to decorate their fronts.

The plant trade is reported good and some fine blooming stock is shown by the up-town florists. Schray, Beyer, Sanders, Jablonsky, Bentzen and others are well stocked up.

Various Notes.

Martin Reukauf, who represents H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, is here this week.

Carew Sanders, who has been ill, is much improved of late and will soon be visiting his old friends.

The officers of the Florists' Club held another well attended meeting on November 27 and perfected plans to raise the big flower show fund. Frank A. Weber will make a full report at the next club meeting.

Miss M. S. Newman had a fine Thanksgiving trade. Her window was prettily decorated with extra fine chrysanthemum blooms.

Frank A. Weber, of H. J. Weber & Son's Nursery Co., will leave this week for an eastern business trip, but expects to be back in time for the club meeting.

George Waldbart had a busy time of it and reports the Thanksgiving business better than last year. Everything sold well.

William C. Smith & Co., our new wholesale firm, report a fine trade their first week in business, their specialty being extra fine California violets.

Louis A. Giger has left the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers. It has been rumored that he will go back east.

R. A. McPheron, of Litchfield, Ill., was a visitor Sunday.

The Bentzen Floral Co. has a lot of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in fine bloom for the local trade.

Ed Gerlach, at C. A. Kuehn's, reports a good shipping trade for Thanksgiving. This house is receiving a great lot of carnations and roses.

Edwin Denker, of St. Charles, Mo., was in town Saturday and reports fine Thanksgiving trade and a good general business.

George Angermueller reports a good rush of fancy long Beauties for Thanksgiving trade. Smaller roses were plentiful. Only the fancy grades sold clean.

Fred H. Weber, on Boyle avenue, did a large business in cut stock of all kinds, also a number of decorations, last week. He was kept busy all Thanksgiving day.

Henry G. Berning had extra mums, roses and carnations, also a fine lot of California violets, and all hands were kept busy Thanksgiving day.

The members of the St. Louis Florists' Club should not forget that the most important meeting of the year will take place Thursday afternoon, December 13. This will also be the last meeting in the old hall. The trustees will make known the new location. Two important discussions will take place and the flower show committee will make a report. President Irish expects a full attendance.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Thanksgiving proved a good day for the florists of this city. There was a good demand for flowers and prices were satisfactory; of course the chrysanthemum was easily first and nearly all were taken.

From present reports the trade in decorating greens this Christmas will exceed all other years. The Bash Seed Co., the Vale Seed Co. and Huntington & Page, seedsmen, besides the florists, who always handle greens, are laying in large stocks to fill orders. The Bash Seed Co. had a lot of fine holly for Thanksgiving that sold well.

E. A. Nelson has a nice bench of poinsettias that will be just right for the holidays. He also has a good pink sport of Enchantress.

The different florists who have stands in the Tomlinson market will shortly have to move, as the building is to be remodeled. They will be back again in a few months in much better quarters.

S.

NEW LONDON, WIS.—E. N. Olson has a well established greenhouse and reports business good. He has a bench of Brides and Maids that are scarcely to be equaled. His entire plant is up-to-date and the outlook is excellent.

TOLEDO, O.—John Barrows has ordered a new, up-to-date wagon with rubber tires. It will be maroon and pea-green, trimmed black and fine striped in scarlet. He has a fine bench of poinsettias, some of which are six feet tall.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The week past has been a most satisfactory one. Thanksgiving saw a general clean-up in all kinds of choice stock. The Army-Navy football game on Saturday made a great demand for violets and yellow chrysanthemums. The first german, in Baltimore on Monday, helped the wholesalers, creating a great demand for Beauties and other choice roses. Roses of all kinds have advanced in price, the best Brides and Maids bringing $12 per hundred and a few selects $15. Richmond was in especially good demand, also Beauties, the market cleaning up nicely on this latter stock. Anything good in carnations sold on sight, especially the colored varieties. Stevia has arrived, and makes a nice addition to the list. A great number of cattleyas have been used and are fine just now. There are still some good chrysanthemums coming in white Eaton, white and yellow Jones and some fine Jeanne Nonin, of which the Robert Craig Co. is still cutting quite a number. Some small bunch Ivory are arriving and find ready sale for the cheaper grades of work. A few of the new Gov. Herrick violets grown by Mrs. Smith, of Secane, are arriving, and demand a good price. Commission-men are all congratulating themselves on the nice move-off of chrysanthemums the latter part of the week. It was thought that there would be a few too many, but everything cleaned up in fine shape.

Various Notes.

It is thought the exceptional shortage in Beauties and other roses at this time is due to the fact that every year the growers aim to get their main crop at Christmas.

J. W. Young has so far recovered that he is able to be about the greenhouse.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. report the following visitors this week: Miss Ritter, of Fitchburg, Mass., and George Seidel, of Hazelton, Pa.

The Lord & Burnham Co. has the contract for three houses 20x150 for George Burton, of Wyndmoor, Pa.; also for one house for Mrs. R. Smith, of Secane, Pa., truss construction, 18x50, for propagating.

W. E. McKissick's stock of chrysanthemums last week was so large that it required an annex to hold the surplus, but he reports a general clean-up.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. report a heavy shipment of Christmas bells and other holiday goods arriving on various steamers this week.

December 3 was the first meeting of the Monday Evening Dancing Class. There were also quite a number of teas during the week, which used up quite a nice lot of choice stock.

M. Rice & Co. will receive this week duplicate shipments of their Christmas novelties, consisting of mats, baskets, etc., which will arrive on the steamer Pallanza.

P. J. Lynch, the able and popular secretary and treasurer of the Dingee & Conard Co., entertained the members of the Florists' Club on Tuesday evening with an account of his trip west and the advancement in horticulture in that section of the country.

Mrs. Sarah I. Smith, of Secane, has an exceptionally fine lot of carnations now in full crop. Joost, Boston Market and Enchantress are the varieties grown. Her three houses of violets are perfect, a sight worth seeing.

George Burton's roses will be heard from during the next two weeks.

Edward Neville has resigned the presidency of the Germantown Horticultural Society, which he has held with credit for nine years.

The Dingee & Conard Co. have their new range of glass filled with young roses in pots in good growing condition.

Edward Towell, of Roslyn, should cut heavily from his roses at the holidays.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

57—Will cut flowers be plentiful in the Philadelphia market this season?

I have not been able to get about much this fall. I believe that while the production will be greater than ever before, it will not be as great as the glass added last summer would lead one to expect. I think that until Lent the demand will fully equal and at times exceed the supply. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

At last, winter's icy breath and seasonable weather. December came in like a lion. Sunday was colder still. Accustomed as we are to a temperate condition, the eager and nipping air sought the marrow of our bones. On Monday came down the first snow of the winter, melting as it fell. Then at night the mercury sank again and the long fight with the coal trust and Boreas has begun. Fortunately Christmas is knocking at the door and Easter is only three short months away.

Everybody is beginning preparations for the holidays. The Christmas trees are on the way. Carloads of them will be here before the week is over. Holly is coming from the south in unbounded quantity and the green goods and evergreen roping manufacturers are working night and day. Supply men are shipping immensely all over the country. Bells are in demand, of every size and kind. Novelties are many. Retail windows already indicate many surprises in unique vase, box and basket. The days of the commonplace are gone. This is too fast an age for relics. The call for the novel and beautiful is everywhere.

Thanksgiving caused hardly a ripple in the market, so abundant were the chrysanthemums and so slightly is the holiday observed with floral decorations. Prices held steady and many of the retailers seemed pleased with the extra business. But it was only the natural increase that comes always with the nearness of the Christmas festival.

Beauties easily commanded steady values, $60 per hundred being about the top. They hold there now and probably will remain steady. Brides and Maids are on their way to better figures. Good stock is worth $10 per hundred this week. All roses feel the influence of demand and the effect of light receipts. The promise for Christmas is an abundance that will make abnormal prices impossible.

Carnations now are grand in size and quality and the great novelties are again abundant. Some of them readily bring $8 to $10 per hundred. The supply is up to expectations and there seems to be no decrease in their popularity. Violets are more abundant and $1 seems to be considered top. There will evidently be enough and to spare. The same cannot be said of orchids. A fair tip as to the Christmas supply would easily be to book your orders early. McManus already has his quiver full of them. The mums have evidently decided to stay for

Various Notes.

Next year we are to have a flower show worthy of New York, whether it will be the New York Club or the American Institute that fathers it. Depend upon it, the triumphs of the west in this line, at Kansas City and Chicago, have not passed unheeded. Take warning now of the good intentions of the east, even if the path to the proverbial Hades may be paved with them.

P. O'Mara will give a lecture on "Sports" before the Horticultural Society of New York at the American Institute Wednesday afternoon, December 12.

Dean & Co. have a fine range of houses at Little Silver, N. J., all modern and 350 feet in length, covering a total of 50,000 square feet and all devoted to Bride and Maid roses, sometimes sending to the New York market 10,000 in a day. The entire output is handled by Traendly & Schenck. The stock is in splendid condition. The firm has been established nine years. Mr. Dean is a brother-in-law of Frank McMahon, of Seabright, N. J.

It is about time for the annual turkey contest of the Flatbush Bowling Club, an event of no small moment with this perpetual brotherhood. Every Thursday evening the lover of good-cheer and healthful exercise finds here a cordial welcome.

Next Monday night, December 10, the New York Florists' Club will bid farewell to 1906. It has been a prosperous year with this strenuous organization. Many new members have been added and great interest in the monthly exhibitions and discussions displayed, the November meeting being the banner night of all. So keen is the interest in the election of new officers for 1907 that it is hardly necessary to suggest a crowd for Monday.

Visitors last Saturday were E. J. Fancourt, of the Pennock-Meehan Co., and John Westcott, president-elect of the S. A. F., of Philadelphia.

The wholesale employees have a neat announcement card in all the stores. The second annual ball takes place on Saturday, January 5, at the Manhattan Casino. The Twenty-second Regiment band has been secured. A big crowd is assured. The officers are Nick C. Schreiner, president; Charles Matthews, vice-president; John Foley, treasurer; John Egenbrod, financial secretary; Arthur Wiese, recording secretary. Last year the boys proved their ability to carry through the project most successfully. They will do it again.

New York vs. Madison.

It was a reminder of old times—that bowling match last Saturday evening between the stalwart master gardeners of the rose city and the vigorous seedsmen of New York. It was the return match, for these nervy Madisons scalped the New Yorkers on their first meeting, and after sleeping for two weeks on their home alleys they came to the big city with proud stride and the fire of victory in their eyes. But the fires burned out and the stride changed to weariness before the night was over. It was a sad and solemn march to the station and bedraggled feathers on the head-pieces of the fallen braves. The rubber will be played at Madison.

New York has some fine players. Al Rickards, Protin and Chadwick all made fine averages, so did Keating and Duckham for the visitors. Good-fellowship was rampant, and Bobby Schultz, the irrepressible, was in his element. The "mule team" made melody and Totty and his companions had some glowing stories to tell of the mines and mountains of Colorado. A fine lunch was served. The score follows:

Madison.	1st	2d	3d	T'l
Herrington	156	166	137	459
Totty	109	121	109	339

Some of the spectators had a little match of their own, as follows:

Dowd	158	135	Wilson	138	111
Fenrich	189	189	Burnett	85	...
Shaw	130	156	Adam	90	...

The match took place at the Rankin alleys, 37 Park Row, opposite the post-office, and arrangements were made by the New Yorkers for a permanent organization, with Saturdays for the bowling night until further notice. Ten names were at once enrolled, and a membership of twenty is assured. With Wheeler as president, Chadwick, secretary, and Will Rickards, treasurer, the club's success and permanency may be depended on. All who desire to join are requested to be present at 7:30 next Saturday evening. The locality is convenient for all. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

AN ACTIVE NEW-YORKER.

One of the younger members of the wholesale fraternity in New York is Alexander J. Guttman. He has brought to the business an indefatigable energy and a liking for the work, which goes a long way toward successful effort. He has not confined himself solely to the wholesale cut flower business, but in partnership with Charles Weber, a well-known Long Island grower, distributed Victory carnations last season so successfully that Mr. Guttman has now entered into an arrangement with John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., for the dissemination of the latter's two new sorts of this season, Imperial and Pink Imperial. Mr. Guttman is one of the nominees for the secretaryship of the New York Florists' Club, the election to be held next Monday evening. He has ever since his connection with the trade taken a prominent part in all organized effort for the advancement of trade interests and has been a wide traveler, attending all the principal flower shows and trade conventions throughout the United States.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Thanksgiving trade was most satisfactory, everything cleaning out well. Chrysanthemums, as was to be expected, were abundant and made but little advance in price. The highest price we heard of on these was $6 per dozen. Roses and carnations were both rather scarce and brought somewhat higher prices, especially the bright-colored sorts. Of violets there was a splendid supply, the singles being in best demand, but all sold out. Scarlet bouvardia sold well and poinsettias made their initial appearance. Other flowers were not especially plentiful.

Alexander J. Guttman.

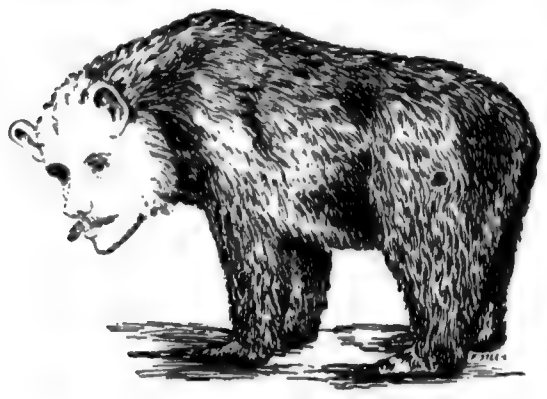
Since Thanksgiving prices have ruled firm, some of the better grades of tea roses making $2 per dozen. Carnations are also higher, while violets keep up to the dollar mark, some going higher. Mignonette of good quality is coming in, selling from $3 to $8 per hundred. There is a good supply of Paper Whites and a few Roman hyacinths are appearing. Callas and Easter lilies are both rather scarce. No change in quotations on green stock.

Poinsettias and Lorraine begonias in pans are appearing in quantity, also azaleas, cyclamens, ardisias and other seasonable pot plants. The colder weather we are now experiencing will, however, check the sale of both these and cut flowers.

Boston vs. Chicago.

A paragraph in a recent issue of the REVIEW gave Chicago credit for having more train arrivals and departures than any other city in the world. There are several cities which surpass Chicago in this respect, one of these being Boston. Boston's great South Terminal station, the biggest on the American continent, has 848 arrivals and departures of passenger trains daily. The North Union station has 602. The freight trains at the two stations number 174 daily, a grand total of 1,622, or eighty-five more than Chicago. The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn R. R. has a ten-minute service which would add 100 more to Boston's credit.

We admit Chicago's greatness in many ways, but she must continue to play second fiddle to Boston in train statistics for some time. It must be remembered that within fifty miles of Boston resides a population of over 3,200,000, which is several hundred thousand more than Chicago has within a similar radius.



Various Notes.

A school garden conference will be held at Horticultural hall on December 15, with addresses by a number of prominent workers.

At the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on December 18, W. H. Wyman, of the Bay State Nurseries, will speak on "Craft and the Craftsman."

Welch Bros. had a splendid Thanksgiving trade. H. M. Robinson & Co. also had a first-class turn-over in flowers for their first year.

TOMATOES.

Training and Pinching.

It is generally conceded that the single-stem system is the most practicable for the commercial grower, the plants being set from twelve to fourteen inches apart, according to variety and width of bench. One stake only is necessary for each plant, but this should be a strong one and should have the support of at least one wire; if two, all the better. Where one only is used it should be near the top of the stakes to which these should be firmly attached. Another wire about half way up the stakes will help to stiffen and strengthen the whole thing.

The plants should be supported as soon as planted by being loosely tied to the stakes. Loosely means that the string is tied so as to allow for the swelling of the stem; otherwise it will become girdled as growth proceeds. To make sure that the string will stay in place it should be wrapped around the stake first, then around the stake and stem together and securely tied. Raffia is the best and cheapest material to use. As growth proceeds tying should be frequently attended to, as the points will draw over to the light and become bent if tying is too long delayed.

All the pinching that is necessary is to keep all side growths taken out as they appear, and after the plants have reached the top of the stakes to pinch out the points and stop their skyward journey. We also find that quite frequently growths appear on the ends or the bunches of fruit, especially when the plants are growing strong. As these are a decided detriment to the development of the fruit, they should be pinched out as they appear.

We sometimes have found it necessary to cut away part of the leaves of some varieties to admit the light and prevent crowding, but as a rule varieties that make such heavy foliage as to make this necessary are not the most profitable ones to grow. Though they are generally the producers of the heaviest fruit they will not produce so much weight or fruit per plant as some of the less rampant growers.

W. S. Croydon.

CUCUMBERS.

Pollination.

The cucumber, like the other members of the gourd family to which it belongs, bears two kinds of blossoms on widely separate parts of the plant. The staminate or non-fruit-bearing flower, is the first to appear and is in general borne near the base of the plant. The pistillate blossom with the embryo cucumber at its base appears later and is borne near the extremity of the newly forming and rapidly growing shoots. Since these flowers are normally produced in this way, it is necessary that a transfer of pollen be made from the staminate to the pistillate flowers through the agency of insects or by other artificial means, says L. C. Corbett, in a recent bulletin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Under greenhouse conditions and at the time of year that the cucumber is forced it is necessary to provide for pollination. In small establishments this work can be done by hand. The staminate blossoms are removed, the petals turned back so as to allow the anthers to project, and the pencil thus produced is then thrust into the cup of the pistillate flower in such a way as to distribute pollen upon the stigma of the pistillate flower. In large establishments where hand pollination is out of the question a colony of honey bees frequently is placed in each house to accomplish the work.

TEMPERATURE FOR ASPARAGUS.

What temperature ought Asparagus plumosus be kept in to keep it green and growing? E. L.

Asparagus plumosus does well in a night temperature of 60 degrees. If the foliage is losing color it is not on account of too high or too low a temperature. It is pretty sure the cause is that the asparagus is not planted in a solid bed. It hates to have its roots separated from Mother Earth by boards at the bottom of the bench. W. S.

TROUBLE WITH POINSETTIAS.

Kindly give me some information about the treatment of poinsettias. I have grown them for two years. About the time they are commencing to show color the leaves commence to get yellow and drop off. I grow them in pots. Nice foliage until now. I keep them at 65 degrees at night and syringe every day. F. H.

We frequently hear of this trouble with these tropical plants. There are two definite causes for the leaves of poinsettias turning yellow and dropping. The first is too low a temperature. As you say you keep your house at 65 degrees, that is not the cause, because that temperature is abundantly high. You must seek for the other cause, which is exhaustion of the soil. The roots have no more to feed on and the foliage suffers.

The writer has had a good deal to say about these showy plants the last ten years. Having grown them in all sorts of shapes and sizes for thirty-five years, we think we know some of the troubles you are liable to stumble against. One, often alluded to in the pages of the REVIEW, is the fatal mistake of disturbing their roots after the middle of October. Such a slight disturbance of root as would be caused by a careful shift from a 4-inch to a 6-inch pot is disturbance enough to be fatal to the foliage. This has been demonstrated to us most vividly, to our great loss. That is why all shifting and making up of pans should be completed prior to the middle of October.

The poinsettia is a native of Mexico, and is truly tropical, but if its roots are healthy and vigorous it will endure a much lower temperature than is generally supposed. Now if you have not been shifting or disturbing the roots of your plants recently, then your case must be one of soil exhaustion. To shift them now would be out of the question, and all you can do is give them some weak liquid manure twice a week. This you can make by putting half a pint of fresh dairy or stable manure in a barrel with thirty-two gallons of water. Put the manure in a coarse sack and let it soak for twenty-four hours before using. This may impart some vigor to the roots and arrest the dropping of the leaves. It is all you can do. Once the roots of the poinsettia lose their vitality they rot quickly and are beyond help.

Unless you are trying to knock off mealy bug, which about now appears among the nectar cups at the base of the bract, there is no need of daily syringing. We don't syringe at all after the bracts begin to show color. It is just possible you are keeping the roots too wet. W. S.

GERANIUMS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

What is the best time to put geranium cuttings in sand to have them in bloom for Decoration day in 3-inch and 4-inch pots. W. B.

The date of putting in geranium cuttings has less to do with the date of flowering than has their treatment. We put in our first cuttings at the end of September and all through October, not in the sand, but pot at once into 2-inch and 2½-inch pots. These, after a pinching in January, are sure to be in full flower at Decoration day. Cuttings from old plants lifted in October are usually in good order in January, and there is no need of putting them in the sand. Pot them at once. Pot firmly and give them one good watering and place on a light bench. In three weeks they will be rooted and will make better plants than those from the sand.

These later propagated plants will need no pinching, but, shifted into their flowering pot in the end of March, should be in good flower at the end of May. The principal cause of geraniums running to leaf and being shy of flower is because they are potted too loosely, with too much manure or leaf-mold. Pot into a heavy loam with a 5-inch pot of bone flour to a bushel of the loam and pot firmly. W. S.

PYRETHRUMS FOR CUTTING.

Referring to my recent notes on pyrethrums, it may interest American readers to hear that this useful hardy herbaceous perennial is grown by market men in England by the acre for cut bloom for market, some growers having as many as five acres and one or two cultivating nearly ten acres each. Many growers and, in fact, all growers when first commencing their cultivation, make a failure the first year or two of planting out, through not planting at the proper time of the year. Some growers think they may be moved practically all the year around, while others only during the period from February to June, and one of our leading specialists continually advocates the months of August and September. But according to my own experience these two latter are the worst possible months of the whole twelve.

There is only one month pyrethrums may be successfully moved and that is April (at least, in England). The great essential point is that the clumps be taken up and divided just at a time when they are in their full spring growth, and in such weather they continue growing without the slightest check and commence to take root in their new quarters from the moment they are planted. At that time, and under such conditions only can the clumps be divided down to two eyes and ninety per cent be sure of living and making salable retail nursery clumps by the following spring. Of course, the bulk cultivated here are white varieties, the best being Carl Vogt, snow white; Aphrodite, ivory white; Sambamburg, white with yellowish center, and White Aster, white with blush center. All the four are double. B. J.

Girard, Kan.—Sourdry Bros. have just completed their new plant. It is 100 feet square, with 12,500 feet of glass. There are six houses, one 20x100 and five 16x100 feet each, but there are no partitions between these houses and all are really under one roof. The plant is heated by hot water and the firm will install a mechanical watering system. Their specialties will be lettuce, cut flowers and mixed plants.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Mark Aitken, Springfield, Mass., has a grand lot of cyclamens for Christmas. The rule now is to grow them to separate colors. The strain is Boddington's Special. The new store has proved a big drawing card and business is brisk.

William Schlatter & Son, Springfield, Mass., talk of taking a larger store, as business seems to demand it. They have a big stock at the greenhouses, grown by the senior member of the firm.

Louis Robinson is handling a quarter of a million of bulbs this season in his houses at Springfield, Mass. He says there is money in bulbs if handled right.

Frank Burfitt, who is located at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and is known as the "Broadway Florist," has a place which is up-to-date, and, though it is small, he makes every foot count.

At South Hadley Falls, Mass., Joseph Beach has added to his plant and reports increasing demand.

Field & Sinclair, of Holyoke, Mass., report a good demand for high grade stock, orchids being among their specialties.

H. W. Field, of Northampton, Mass., has a fine batch of late chrysanthemums. Merry Christmas, Maud Dean, Rieman and a pink Jerome Jones were noted. A fine seedling carnation, Lawson x Queen, was noticed, which is a brighter shade than Lawson, earlier, and a continuous bloomer, but not so late. A white from the same source is thought much of. Helen Goddard is popular, but Enchantress is grand. Prospector is a glowing scarlet. A sport from Maceo, a rich crimson, is considered an improvement on that variety. A house of primulas in 6-inch pots will be a bonanza for Christmas. Orchids are reported profitable. Lælias, cattleyas and cypripediums are in crop and bring good prices.

Fred E. Keyes, of Worcester, Mass., has taken over the business conducted by his father for many years, and will continue it under the old name.

H. W. Littlefield, of Worcester, is doing a good business at his main store, his branch store also proving a profitable venture.

MILWAUKEE.

The trade for Thanksgiving was about the same as last season. There was a heavy call for carnations and supply was equal to demand. Roses were somewhat off, crop and first-class shipping stock sold out clean at a good price. There were plenty of chrysanthemums to go around and all high grade blooms sold well, but inferior qualities moved slowly at low prices. Violets are not so plentiful, for apparently not so many are grown in this section as in former years; therefore the supply was limited. There were plenty of valley and stevia to meet all demands. Romans and Paper Whites also made their appearance and sold well. The demand for chrysanthemum plants was not up to former seasons. There were quite a number of plants grown in this vicinity and a number of growers are complaining on account of the light call for them.

THE onion seed situation is up in the air. Many of the dealers are still expecting that the growers will still send on a little more seed. What they base their expectations on is hard to understand. There is a feeling, as there always is when a short crop is harvested, that many of the growers are holding

THERE seems to be no indication that sweet corn, cucumber, squash or pumpkin will be short, but reports are that some of the muskmelons are not up to expectations.

TIMOTHY seed is firmer on the Chicago market, December selling at $4.37½; May, $4.50 bid and $4.60 asked. Clover seed is unchanged, cash lots ranging from $8.50 to $13.40.

REPORTS indicate the Michigan radish seed crop is not more than twenty-five per cent of what it should be. The majority of the growers have thrashed out their product and the cleaning out is a disappointment.

THE onion set growers are now out after seed for their next spring's needs and this seems to make matters worse instead of better when a dealer wishes to get at the actual value of the seed he is lucky enough to possess.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

The crops of red clover in England appear to be satisfactory. Especially does this apply to the south Lincolnshire cultures and some low prices for fine quality seeds are expected. It was asserted the other day, by a leading Lincolnshire seed grower, that there would be above the average yield of home-grown clover seed, so much so as to considerably affect the sale of foreign seeds; and more than one seed merchant who handles clover largely (one as much as sixty tons of red each year) said he expected to use nothing but English-grown seed during 1907.

There are at least two facts which tend to help make a success of clover cultures for seed in Lincolnshire. One is that dodder does not at all trouble the growers in that district. Why that is true I am not able to say, but I know that in all other districts it is the worst enemy of any clover crop. One of the largest clover growers in the Boston district stated that in his opinion the reason dodder is of no consequence is that the land in that district is in the highest state of cultivation and is the best possible soil to produce vigorous clover. The crop is able at an early stage of growth to completely choke the destructive weed. I have noticed, and also heard it asserted many times, that dodder is always the greatest trouble on sandy or chalky soils, in which case the absence of trouble in the district in question is easily explained, as a better all-round quality of soil is not to be found in all England than that in south Lincolnshire.

Another fact recently came to my notice in the clover trade while traveling in Lincolnshire. That was, contrary to the general experience, seed procured from the Chilian supplies, when grown in the district in question, produces finer seed than from seed procured from any other source. The crop of seed the first year is lighter in weight and not of such a good color. The second year it is equal to other supplies from other sources, and the third year is superior to that procured from any other district. Just why this is so does not seem to be fully understood among the local farmers, but probably it is again the result of being grown on soil best suited to its requirements. Certainly some samples which I recently inspected in the district, from Chilian supplies, were the finest I had ever seen.

While on the subject of clover it may be interesting to mention that, in this country at least, owing to the vastly improved cleaning machinery of our leading seed houses, clover samples are generally offered comparatively free from weed seeds. Some fifteen or eighteen different kinds of weed seeds were commonly found in samples of red clovers. All of these to the casual observer may appear identical to clover seed in size, shape and color, but on closer examination they will be found totally different in appearance and any grower, accus-

PURE SEEDS.

E. Brown, botanist in charge of the government's seed testing laboratory at Washington, sends out the following:

"In reference to the effect of the work of this department in connection with the publication of the names and addresses of firms found to have offered for sale adulterated seed, together with the analyses of the samples found to be adulterated, I would say that this has had a very stimulating effect on the trade, if we are able to judge from the number of samples constantly being sent to the department by dealers for examination as to the presence of adulterants. This laboratory will be glad, so far as it is able, to make tests for purity and germination, and to examine any samples which may be submitted for the purpose of determining the presence of adulterants.

"One way in which farmers are able to get good quality of seeds is to inform the seedsmen at the time of asking for samples that both the sample and the seed when received will be sent to either the seed laboratory of the agricultural department or the state experiment station for examination.

"One of the greatest obstacles in the way of better seed is the fact that the farmer is very apt to purchase seed of inferior quality if it is offered at a slightly lower price. There is, however, little relation between the difference in price and the difference in quality, it being almost invariably true that the good seed in lower priced grades is much more expensive than the good seed in the best grades."

FRESH BLOOD FERTILIZER.

Of what benefit is blood as it comes fresh from the slaughter-pen to plants in general and especially to geraniums and ferns? How should it be used? Is it suitable for all plants? L. A.

We have been asked this question several times and, without any actual experience, we believe fresh blood is of little use, because it is largely water. There is a preparation made called dried blood; it may be pure dried blood. This has a good reputation and is in great demand among the best growers, both of cut flowers and plants. This is a sanguinary subject and one the writer does not like, but I must repeat—don't bother with the fresh blood. W. S.

LILIUM AURATUM.

I wish to know whether Lilium auratum can be forced for Easter. If so, how early should the bulbs be planted? Is it better to grow this variety outdoors for summer cut flowers? How early should amaryllis bulbs be planted to be in bloom by Easter? K. C. C.

This beautiful lily is sometimes kept in cold storage till the fall, with the object of having them in flower for the holidays. To keep them in cold storage so late that they would be in flower as late as Easter is, I think, impossible, and the new bulbs do not arrive from Japan early enough in the fall to be forced for Easter. But why bother with this class of lilies? We have the longiflorum type for Easter, and that is enough, besides many other beautiful plants and flowers.

Lilium auratum for cut flowers is best grown under glass. Potted as soon as they arrive and started slowly in a cool house, they flower from June on. If you have a well-drained piece of sandy loam, or soil that is largely vegetable deposits, you can plant these lilies outdoors in early May and they will flower in August and September. Let me just add that Lilium auratum is a gorgeous flower, but of little use to florists. Its odor is too strong for most people, and as for using it in a design, I think it would be in as good taste as a gigantic sunflower, or a bride's bouquet made of Timothy Eaton chrysanthemums. Lilium speciosum, album and roseum, are much more valuable to a commercial florist.

You do not say whether you have recently purchased the amaryllis bulbs or grown them from last spring. If the latter, you should put the pots on a bench in the full light and give them no water till they send up flower spikes, after which you should water them copiously. If bulbs bought of a seedsman, pot them, sinking each bulb half its depth in the soil. Water the soil once and then no more till the flower spike appears. If desired at Easter you might leave the first watering till the middle of January.

LANSING, MICH.

Comment.

J. A. Bissinger, of the Capitol Avenue Greenhouse, reports an exceptionally good trade for Thanksgiving, much heavier than in 1905.

G. R. Smith, of the Riverside greenhouses, says that everything went, but demand did not greatly exceed supply. His large stock of chrysanthemums was completely cleaned up.

G. F. Bauerle, the enterprising North Lansing florist, did a thriving bit of business during Thanksgiving week.

Of course every violet from the Maplewood violet house was sold before Thanksgiving day. The cut was slightly in excess of last year.

May 1, 1907, the business of Maplewood Violet House will be merged into the Maplewood Violet Nursery Co. E. A. Zimmerman, who has been for many years connected with the Bridgeport Nursery, of Bridgeport, Ind., has purchased a half interest and the business will be enlarged to include the cultivation of plants, trees and shrubs. This is the only firm in Lansing taking up this line of work. P. L. C.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The Pierson U-Bar Co.'s successful low bid on the Central park greenhouses was $20,475. There were three higher bids.

EDWARDSVILLE, ILL.—J. F. Ammann, president of the Illinois State Florists' Society, will attend the meeting of the Bloomington Florists' Club, December 13, to consult in reference to a working committee to be appointed for the annual meeting of the society, to be held in that city the second Tuesday in February.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

FRANK A. WEBER, of H. J. Weber & Son's Nursery Co., St. Louis, is visiting eastern nurseries looking for stock.

JAMES TRUITT & SONS, of Chanute, Kan., are building a storage and packing house for nursery stock. It will be 115x225 feet, frame, with brick veneer.

THE nurserymen in Chester county, Pennsylvania, were still digging and planting up to December 4 and have had an especially long and prosperous autumn season.

THE Vermont State Horticultural Society is in session at Burlington Wednesday and Thursday of this week. J. H. Hale, South Glastonbury, Conn., is on the program for two addresses.

L. L. MAY & Co., of St. Paul, Minn., will build a cold storage house at Lakeland, Minn., for the purpose of wintering their nursery stock. The building will be 157x200 feet, the wall to be provided with four dead air spaces.

THE death of George Ellwanger, head of Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, N. Y., occurred November 26. He was 90 years of age. A brief account of his long and active life will be found in the obituary column on another page of this issue.

SEVERAL nurserymen, among them M. J. Wragg, C. L. Watrous, C. G. Patten and W. M. Bomberger, are on the program for the forty-first annual convention of the Iowa State Horticultural Society at Des Moines, December 11 to 13.

J. E. MCMAHON, the nurseryman at Home, Kan., has bought a section and a quarter of land near Denver, Colo., and will establish a branch nursery on a quarter section of it. He is said to be a good authority on soil and tree culture and says he is satisfied that the soil and climate are well adapted for fruit growing.

STARK BROS. CONSOLIDATE.

The following report comes from Atlantic, Ia., under date of November 29: "The Stark Bros. Nursery Co. is to quit business in Atlantic. This was the word received by I. N. Brown, local manager for the concern, in the shape of an order from the main office at Louisiana, Mo., to ship teams, stock, etc., to them and wind up the business here. The reason of the decision on the part of the nursery firm is not exactly known, but it is said that they have not found the local nursery a profitable one and that many of the local conditions are not auspicious. The company purchased the Wilson nursery business some years ago and since that time I. N. Brown has been the manager."

A SHRUBBY GOLDENROD.

Bigelovia graveolens, a low growing and very hardy shrub common to sterile soils throughout the Rocky Mountain region, bears profuse blooms so like those of the goldenrod that it may be regarded horticulturally as only a shrubby form of the latter. It appears to grow well in the east in any dry situation, soon forming bushy, spreading clumps three or four feet high and as much in diameter. The leafage is narrow but dense, and covered with short, woolly hairs, giving the plant a distinct if not especially ornamental appearance. The yellow inflorescence consists of abundant feathery flower heads thrown well above the foliage, and is produced in September. While not comparable in floral effect to the most showy species of solidago, or goldenrod, to which it is closely related, its shrubby habit and distinct appearance make it worthy of a place in mixed plantings. It is readily increased by seeds, layers and cuttings. Nurseries generally offer collected plants, as the demand is too limited to encourage propagation. We have received a dwarfer variety, known as albicaulis, from D. M. Andrews, Boulder, Colo. The foliage is densely woolly. Mr. Andrews considers it a suitable shrub for low hedges and edgings as well as mixed borders.—W. Van Fleet, in the Rural New-Yorker.

FLOWERLESS LILACS.

Will you kindly tell me why my lilacs never bloom? I mean the outdoor ones. Should all the suckers be kept off and just have have one main growth? The plants seem in good health, but never have any bloom, and my neighbor's are just the same way. Please tell me what to do for them. Can there be such a thing as all males and no females

M. E. A.

The lilacs we import from Belgium for forcing are grafted or budded on the common privet, Ligustrum vulgaris, and when planted out suckers will occur, and should, of course, be kept off. With lilacs propagated from cuttings or layers, which our American nurserymen sell, the suckers, if any, are as true to species as any part of the shrub.

There may be several reasons why your lilac bushes do not flower. Remember that flowering and bearing fruit in shrubs and trees is no indication of health and vigor, rather otherwise.

The lilac is one of those hardy deciduous shrubs that should be pruned, if at all, immediately after it has done flowering. It sets its flower buds for another year at the same time that it is flowering. Now if you go, during winter or early spring, and cut off or shorten back the growth the plant made last June you will be cutting off all the flower buds and induce only a strong, blind growth. If this is not your error, then dig a trench all around your lilac bushes. Keep five or six feet from the stem, but deep enough to cut off all the strong roots. This will impair their vigor and throw them into flower. Keep your knife and pruning shears away. W. S.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Business last week was steady and the general report is that every one had about all he could take care of conveniently. Specimen blooms of chrysanthemums were in big demand and, except with two of our largest growers, they were hard to secure. Medium sized mums did not seem to sell as well as the larger blooms. Roses are not too plentiful and a great many were shipped in for the Thanksgiving trade. Carnations were also quite scarce. Violets were largely called for, even at $1 per bunch of twenty-five. Chrysanthemum plants are slow sale. A great many dealers are carrying quite a number, but in order to get anything out of them, are compelled to cut them and use them for cut flowers. Funeral work has been heavy.

St. Paul.

The partnership in the Swanson Floral Co. has been dissolved, Gust A. Colberg having purchased August S. Swanson's share in the business. In future it will be run under the name of Gust A. Colberg.

J. W. Hoffman, manager of the L. L. May & Co. retail cut flower department, says Thanksgiving trade exceeded by considerable that of a year ago.

Olaf J. Olson, of Holm & Olson, says their trade was good and in addition to disposing of all their own chrysanthemums they bought large numbers from other growers. Trade in their new store, he says, has increased greatly.

C. F. Vogt reports a good trade, the demand for floral designs being especially heavy.

Vogt Bros. report a fine trade for Thanksgiving and a very heavy demand for violets, which were hard to obtain.

E. T. Lemke has had possibly as fine a lot of mums as were seen this season; also his violets and carnations are hard to beat.

Minneapolis.

Jas. Souden, of the Wm. Donaldson Co., says they had about all the business they could take care of. Their own stock is doing well, but on account of the heavy demand they are compelled to buy considerable.

Ralph Latham says trade is good and so far has been able to secure some fine roses, especially Chatenay, Brides and Maids. FELIX.

MONTPELIER, VT.—The state legislature on November 23 passed a bill fixing a license for dealers in evergreen trees.

KATE MOULTON ON THE COAST.

Among the many interesting things to be seen at the establishment of William H. Sibson, at Portland, Ore., is a house 200 feet long planted to the Kate Moulton rose. Mr. Sibson grows a large list of varieties and has excellent success with all his stock under glass, but the behavior of Miss Kate Moulton has particularly pleased him. It has grown finely and appears to be free from the eccentricities which are to be noted in so many of our forcing roses. It is abundantly productive and fine in both flowers and foliage, no mildew ever being seen.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

More than a few shipments of azaleas are showing up after being on the road from one to two months. These shipments are from a number of different large shippers of the East, and, barring one shipment, they are almost a total loss. Of all these shipments, the writer has seen but one that was properly protected for such a long, dry journey. With the one exception that has come under my notice, not a box contained an ounce of moss. The trees were as dry as dead brush, with all leaves gone.

The shippers sending goods to this coast should remember two things: First, use enough moss, and, second, during cold weather use dry moss.

Southern California was favored with its first good rain for the season the latter part of November, and it sets all the nurseries to work. Preceding this rain was an unusual cold snap that has, to a considerable extent, destroyed the late beans and early potatoes, and in many localities taken the winter peas. Other growers report the loss of their winter tomatoes. This cold snap is more than thirty days earlier than usual, and will be of great loss to some of the growers, who "gamble" on holiday trade and take great risks with the elements.

The notice of the death of Albert Zimmerman, of Pasadena, Cal., will be found in the obituary column, on another page.

The Market.

Thanksgiving has come and gone, and I am inclined to think that there will be little cause for complaint. We had been enjoying extra fine weather through November until about a week before the holiday, when suddenly we were visited by several days of hot, dry winds, coupled with frosty nights. In consequence there was a great shortage of outdoor stock that was not particularly noticeable until the middle of the week. Violets suffered most and next in order were chrysanthemums. The price of the former was not raised by the growers, but there was a great shortage of stock and there were but few brought to town on Wednesday or Thursday. The demand was heavy but everyone was cut off with a short supply. Good yellow mums for the same reason were scarce and the growers doubled the prices.

Carnations, owing to the heavy out-of-town shipments, were scarce. There was not such a noticeable insufficiency of roses. The demand, I think, was about equal for violets, yellow mums and carnations and these were the only flowers that the retailers had to scramble for. Valley was in fair supply. Some well-grown poinsettias were shown and many Roman hyacinths and narcissi. It will be a few days before the retailers can figure up their business for the week, but I have seen no one who did not appear to be satisfied.

Various Notes.

James Skinner, of Christmas tree fame, is in town on his annual visit from Oregon. He states that the demand this year for trees is heavier than ever.

L. M. Barrett, of Berkeley, is in line with a good supply of maidenhair for the holidays. He has splendid success with Adiantum Croweanum and devotes considerable space to it.

H. Gresens, of Alameda, reports the heaviest business during Thanksgiving week ever experienced by his firm.

Considerable business was done by the local dealers in California red berries. Many customers, who could not be supplied with violets, turned their attention to the berries and seemed to find in them a good substitute. G.

PROPAGATING NUT TREES.

Will you oblige me by giving a little information about propagating nut trees, as I have unsatisfactory results? Please cover, if convenient, in reply, the best mode of selecting, handling, time of planting, etc., of such varieties as English walnut, sweet chestnut, butternut, maple, elm, mountain ash and hawthorn.

C. H. B.

The writer of the above takes in quite a varied list of stock, together with an opportunity to go into considerable detail in the various phases of its growth, but a few of the principal features may clear up some of the difficulties encountered.

To begin with, the subject of the growing of nut trees presents several successive steps. Walnuts, almonds, chestnuts and butternuts are grafted to whatever variety the grower wishes to propagate. The seedlings are usually grafted when about two years old and they make a growth of several feet in the next two seasons, when they are large enough to sell. The exception to this rule is the almond, which is always budded on one-year-old wild stock and attains a salable size the following season.

Seedling nut trees can be procured from any of the large eastern nurseries and if one-year-old seedlings are planted they should be grown one year before they are grafted. They are easily handled and the grafting should be done in December and January, and the ground kept well cultivated, so that the young scion will not dry out when the warm weather begins.

The best selling varieties on this coast are the Chaberte, Franquette, Mayette and Parisienne walnuts, Nonpareil, Paper-shell and IXL almonds, American Sweet, Paragon and Alpha chestnuts.

Considerable success can be had from planting and fruiting nut trees that are grown from selected nuts and not grafted; but the demand has of late years been for grafted trees of well-known sorts. The party inquiring can purchase or grow the seedlings and when the time comes for grafting the scions can be procured without trouble from any reputable tree grower.

With maples there is no trouble whatever. They are easily grown from seed, although young seedlings are sold at such reasonable prices by wholesale dealers, who make a specialty of selling to smaller nurseries, that it hardly pays to propagate them when two or three-year-old seedlings can be had at a few cents per hundred. They are easily handled, perfectly hardy and grow fast when planted in nursery rows. Should the inquirer care to bother, they can be grown very easily from seed, but my advice is to import, as I find it much cheaper. The best selling sorts of maples on this coast are the English silver-leaved, sycamore, Norway and black. They are all of equally easy growth and are good sellers.

The same rule can be applied to elms, mountain ash and hawthorn. The hawthorn, however, if it is desired to grow any of the double sorts, will have to be budded or grafted in the same manner as the nut trees. They can be budded in May or June and grafted in December. Wild or single hawthorns can be purchased at low prices and can be altered when either two or three years old. They have come into great favor within the last few years on this coast and are of the easiest growth and stand transplanting without trouble. G.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Indian summer continues, but we had a rushing Thanksgiving and many orders had to be declined. Many balls and banquets were on, and society was out in force, but a sudden stop was made on account of the terrible wreck on the Southern railroad. A large number of floral tributes were made up for the late C. D. Fisher.

Chrysanthemums are a little scarce, while carnations are more plentiful and roses coming in steadily. Greens of all kinds are plentiful. Violets are making a better show and bring 40 cents a hundred.

Club Meeting.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its regular meeting November 26 with a smaller attendance than usual. P. B. Welsh showed a vase of Helen Frick and Minnie Bailey chrysanthemums. J. J. Perry proposed W. L. Lanahan as an associate member. C. Seigwardt, O. H. Gureth, W. Feast and Edwin Bishop were elected members. J. M. Sommers, of Waverly, and A. Hedwick, of Garrison, were proposed.

C. L. Seybold gave an interesting talk on the coming meeting of the Maryland State Horticultural Society.

It is expected the club will occupy its new rooms after January 1. Our club now has a membership of 141.

Various Notes.

E. A. Seidewitz, formerly of 36 West Lexington street, opened his new store at 323 West Charles street last week. It is up-to-date in every respect. The large window is different from any other in the city, having a drop of several feet below the first floor.

Albert Fiedler & Co. report trade rushing.

Mrs. Jacob Eyer has been bringing in fine mums.

Albert Beckman, at Raspeburg, has sold all his cut flowers and has erected a large new house, but too late for service this year. He is now growing parsley and celery.

C. Gregorius, of Arlington, is offering his place for sale and will go south and start anew.

C. T. Bucher, who has been sick for the last three months, is able to be about again.

Julius Tischinger has made his appearance in market again. J. L. T.

I enclose money order for $1. Please renew my subscription for the best florists' paper printed—the Review.—W. Pittendreigh, Linwood, Mass.

Chanute, Kan.—James Truitt & Sons have lately added extensively to their greenhouse plant, all the glass for the new part being furnished by the Chanute glass plant.

Lima, O.—A. Ernsberger, the resident manager of the greenhouses of Ernsberger Bros., has moved his family to this city. With another week of favorable weather the local greenhouse will send out its first shipment of lettuce.

Charles City, Ia.—The Northwest Iowa Horticultural Society held a three days' session, beginning November 20, in this city. There was a good attendance from Minnesota as well as this state. Mr. Ferris, of Houghton, and other prominent speakers addressed the meeting.

QUEEN BEATRICE

puts in her appearance.

F. H. Kramer, 916 F St. Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Thanksgiving trade, though devoid of any unusual features, was satisfactory. There was a good trade in chrysanthemums and violets, with considerable demand for roses and carnations. With the exception of carnations there was an abundance of stock of all kinds. The carnation situation is improving, though there is no surplus to be had. American Beauty, Killarney, Liberty, Richmond, Brides, Maids and Gates are all showing up well. Good Beauties bring $9 per dozen retail, the average price of tea roses being $2 per dozen. Enchantress carnations sell for $1 and $1.25 per dozen; Lawson, $1; New York violets go fast at $3 per hundred.

The Spencer Funeral.

A noteworthy funeral, from the designer's viewpoint, was that of Samuel Spencer, held at St. John's Episcopal church, Sunday, December 2. Mr. Spencer was president of the Southern railway and met death on his own road. A great part of the work went to J. H. Small & Sons, the Gude Bros. Co., and the Washington Florists' Co. Also a number of handsome pieces were executed by Geo. H. Cooke, J. R. Freeman, Z. D. Blackistone and Geo. C. Shaffer. Orders came from New York and other eastern points, but it is probable that the most elaborate work was executed on the orders of southern friends of the dead president. He was a native of that section and his life work had been its development through his railroad. The most expensive stock on the market was freely used in nearly all the pieces seen at the funeral; cattleyas, cypripediums, orchids, American Beauty roses and lily of the valley were in profusion.

Various Notes.

The advent of the congressmen has infused new life into all branches of business, not excepting the florists. Washingtonians are sometimes inclined to fret over the things congress will not do for them, but they are always ready to welcome it with feelings of thankfulness after the long, dull days of vacation.

The next monthly meeting of the Florists' Club will be ladies' night. All members have been requested to bring their lady friends, and with music and refreshments it is expected there will be a general good time. A. F.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

TO CARNATION GROWERS!

Imperial and Pink Imperial Carnation

HERE are two good ones for you, the former the beautiful variegated delicate pink ground spotted with deeper pink, the latter a Lawson shade of pink and both fancy varieties. They are vigorous growers, no grass and every shoot produces a flower. The supply of cuttings will be limited. You cannot well afford to be without some stock of these two excellent varieties. They should and undoubtedly will prove a most valuable asset to our collection of desirable commercial carnations, and growers who would be up-to-date must not be without them. I have watched carefully these two varieties for some time, and can fully vouch for their excellence.

Cut Blooms may be seen at my place, 43 West 28th St. Enough said.

The first batch of rooted cuttings will be ready December 15, 1906. Place your orders now and be assured of supply for next season. For further particulars regarding these two excellent commercial carnations,

One of the Finest Gifts for the Holidays is a Beautiful Plant

Fine Well-Grown Plants of

TARRYTOWN FERN

Nephrolepis Piersoni Elegantissima

makes one of the finest plants for a holiday gift that we know of. We sell large quantities of these at retail among our local customers, and there is nothing more profitable or satisfactory for Christmas sales than a few of these nice plants. We can offer fine selected specimens in all sizes, from medium sized plants in 6-inch pans up to immense elegant specimens in 10-inch pans, suiting all purses and all classes of trade. Order early and have the stock on hand where you can show it. You will find nothing more satisfactory or profitable. We can supply fine plants as follows: Fine plants. 6-in. pans, 75c and $1.00 each—according to size. Fine specimen plants, 8-in. pans, $1.50 and $2.00 each—according to size. Very fine specimen plants, 10-inch pans, $3.00 each; large specimens, 12-in. pans, $5.00 each; extra large specimens, 14-in. pans, $7.50 each; still larger specimens, 16-in. pans, $10.00 each.

Also young stock for growing on, $12.00 per 100.

MADISON, N. J.

The November meeting of the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society was postponed one week in order to give the members a chance to return from the various places where they had gone to exhibit. Twenty members were present and reported themselves satisfied with the share of honors they had secured. The main business consisted of the nomination of officers. R. Vince and R. M. Schultz were nominated for the presidency, Percy Herbert for vice-president. Our veteran treasurer, not being in good health, sent word that he would prefer being relieved from the burdens of office. Resolutions of regret were adopted. William Charlton and William Duckham were nominated for this office, and E. Reagan for secretary.

Mr. Vince had a vase of White Perfection carnations which secured a cultural certificate. Mr. Totty had a dozen Mariam Hankey. They were the best pinks we have seen this year. By request, Mr. Totty, at the next meeting, will tell us how the new chrysanthemums showed up at the recent exhibitions.

One new member was elected and three others were proposed. R.

Enclosed find $1 for another year's subscription to the Review. The paper pleases me beyond measure. I can find in the advertisements what I want. A single number is often worth a dollar to me in handling my bulbs. I congratulate you on being able to furnish so much information and reading matter for the price.—S. S. Bailey, East Paris, Mich.

The Market.

A favorable report about business is heard from all quarters. Thanksgiving business was a little better than in 1905, but it did not amount to enough to call for a raise in prices. Most of the local growers realized this last year. A few tried to get a fancy price for carnations this Thanksgiving, but found it would not work. All the good stock on the market sold well, and a few Enchantress carnations brought $5 per hundred. The few violets handled in this city were sold by Thanksgiving noon. Good flowers are at a premium at present. The chrysanthemum season being practically over, we must now fall back on carnations and roses. Some varieties of mums are unusually late this year, and, if good flowers, they meet with ready sale. Roses are nothing extra; the Bridesmaids are off color. Carnations are the most satisfactory flowers at present. A great many Rhinebeck violets are seen. Most of the violets grown in this vicinity are singles. Paper White narcissi and Romans have again put in their appearance, but do not sell readily. Romans are almost too expensive to use in funeral work. Cosmos and valley are daily arrivals, as a great many of the latter are used.

Various Notes.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is handling some extra fine Enchantress. They have long, stiff stems and are perfect flowers, the product of Robert Klagge's greenhouses.

Herman Dasher, of Ecorse, Mich., is branching out into the florist's business. The first two houses are in course of construction, 20x90 and 10x90 respectively.

Albert Sylvester, of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, has just received a visit from the stork. It is a girl.

Fred Miesel has an exceptionally fine lot of cyclamen.

William Hielscher, of the Hielscher Wire Works, reports a steady increase over last year's business.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Thanksgiving week was one to be remembered among the trade as the best of any. Everyone was busy. Social functions of all kinds seemed to be doing double turn and the decorators were worked almost to death. This with the usual trade for Thanksgiving day, dinner-table pieces and bouquets for the more modest and unpretentious made up the great volume of business which was done.

There was no scarcity of flowers of any kind. Violets which up to this time seemed scarce, were abundant and sold at from $1.25 to $1.75 per hundred. Roses were good and enough for all. Carnations were more plentiful, although much of the stock was not up to the mark in quality. But chrysanthemums, which are the principal flower for this holiday, were here in such quantities as were never seen before. All kinds were to be had, from good and bad to worst. Some of the growers sent in scraps of rags which made the wholesale men blush to show them, and, while good small mums realized a fair price, the weak-stemmed ones were sold to the sparrows or went to the dump and realized almost as much cash one place as the other. Among the wholesale men there is a sigh of relief to think the mums are over for another season, as, at the prices a great deal of the stock sold for this year, it did not pay to pack the stock in cases where it had to be shipped, tne boxes costing almost as much as the stock.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. has bought out Fred Ruch, the wire worker, who has made most of the floral designs in this city, and employed the men who have been doing the work for Mr. Ruch. They expect to push this branch of the business, and as Pittsburg has the reputation of making the best designs in the country, success is assured.

Tom McCormack, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, has been wearing his head done up in bandages as a result of a meeting with some bad Pittsburg hold-up men.

The green goods men are getting busy with moss, boxwood and laurel. Little pine is to be seen so far and indications are that it will be a scarce article this year.

Prepare For . . . CHRISTMAS

An immense stock of CHOICE CHRISTMAS PLANTS are now ready for immediate shipment. PRICES SLAUGHTERED ONE-HALF.

Is it possible to sell Araucaria Excelsa, 4 years old, 18 to 23 inches high, 5 to 6 tiers, for 75c? Yes!

ASCHMANN DOES IT!

Great Prosperity is in sight for us all; why not for you? A little fortune lays in front of your door; grab it now when you have a chance. Look at others; see how successful they are. Why? Because they are wide-awake, they watch every opportunity and take advantage of bargains. A big demand is in sight for the holidays for the much-admired Decorative Plants.

Araucaria Excelsa, Araucaria Excelsa Glauca and Araucaria Compacta Robusta. Where have you thought of buying them? Surely from a man who makes a specialty of importing araucarias and who can offer you Bargains. Godfrey Aschmann is the man. He has had the reputation for the last ten years of being the great IMPORTER and DEALER in araucarias of America. Prices are slaughtered one half. Never have been offered so low in the history of araucaria cultivation. Why is that? Simply for the reason to Obtain Room for the Cultivation of Our Great Easter Stock.

About 5,000 araucarias, together with an immense stock of ferns, palms, rubbers, Gloire de Lorraine begonias, azaleas and thousands of other plants which must be sold by Christmas.

No home complete without an Auracaria.
It always was and always will be the pet of decorative plants.

It decorates the parlors of Kings and Emperors.

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.
A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 35 cents

The Florists' Manual.
By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Rose—Its Cultivation, Varieties, etc.
By H. B. ELLWANGER. Directions for cultivation—for planting, pruning, propagation, the treatment of diseases and insect enemies—particularly valuable for its classification. Alphabetical and descriptive list of nine hundred and fifty-six varieties. Cloth. $1.25

Greenhouse Construction.
By PROF. L. R. TAFT. A complete manual on the building, heating, ventilating and arrangement of greenhouses, and the construction of hotbeds, frames and plant pits. Lucid descriptions and 118 diagrams and illustrations make every detail clear to the amateur and professional gardener and florist. Cloth. 210 pages. $1.50

Gardening for Pleasure.
By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the amateur in the fruit, vegetable and flower garden, with full directions for the greenhouse, conservatory and window garden. Technical terms and phrases professional gardeners use in writing or speaking on matters relating to horticulture have been avoided as far as possible. 404 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Gardening for Profit.
By PETER HENDERSON. The standard work on market and family gardening. The successful experience of the author for more than thirty years, and his willingness to tell, as he does in this work, the secret of his success for the benefit of others, enables him to give most valuable information. The book is profusely illustrated. 376 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Mushrooms—How to Grow Them.
By WM. FALCONER. This is the most practical work on the subject ever written, and the only book on growing mushrooms published in America. The author describes how he grows mushrooms and how they are grown for profit by the leading market gardeners, and for home use by the most successful private growers. Engravings drawn from nature expressly for this work. Cloth. $1.00

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.
By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result o 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

The Dahlia.
By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

The Young Market Gardener.
By T. GREINER. A guide to beginners in market gardening in the use of greenhouse, hotbeds and frames; together with instructions for open-air operations, and the ways of selling and preparing vegetables for market. Illustrated. Paper. 50 cents

The Propagation of Plants.
By ANDREW S. FULLER. Illustrated with numerous engravings. Describing the process of hybridizing and crossing and also the many different modes by which cultivated plants may be propagated and multiplied. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50

Practical Floriculture.
By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the successful propagation of florists' plants. A detailed account of the requisites to success and a clear explanation of improved methods. For the amateur and professional florist. 325 pages. Cloth. Postpaid. $1.50

The Forcing Book.
By L. H. BAILEY. In this work the author has compiled in handy form the cream of all the available information on the subject of forcing vegetables under glass. In addition to this, the experience of many practical growers in different localities is furnished. $1.00

The Chrysanthemum.
By ARTHUR HERRINGTON, formerly president of Chrysanthemum Society of America. The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. 50 cents

Cabbage, Cauliflower and Allied Vegetables.
By C. L. ALLEN. An explanation of the requirements, conditions, cultivation and general management pertaining to the entire cabbage group. The chapter on seed raising is probably the most authorative treatise on this subject ever published. Insects and fungi are given due attention. Illustrated. 128 pages. Cloth. 50 cents

The History and Culture of Grafted Roses for Forcing.
By ALEX. MONTGOMERY, JR. The most important contribution to the modern literature of the rose. Of much interest to every rose grower and of utmost value to growers of grafted roses. Containing practical description of the process of grafting with full details of planting and culture; also directions for treatment to carry the plants a second year. 35 cents

The Water Garden.
By WILLIAM TRICKER. Embracing the construction of ponds, adapting natural streams, planting, hybridizing, seed saving, propagation, building an aquatic house, wintering, correct designing and planting of banks and margins, together with cultural directions for all ornamental aquatics. Profusely illustrated with nine plates, eighteen full page descriptive views, and numerous other sketches in the text. Large octavo. Cloth. $3.00

The Pruning Book.
By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth, 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.
By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. SC. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.
By PETER HENDERSON. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $4.00

ABOUT FERNS.

It is remarkable that a genus, which up to a few years ago had given so few variations as did the nephrolepis, should now prove so prolific both in seedling varieties, and also sports. The latest addition we have is a bipinnate form of N. cordifolium, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. This was raised from spores by Prickett & Sons, Enfield Highway, London, England. Several plants appeared among a large batch of the ordinary cordifolium. I saw the plants at the nursery some weeks ago, and noted that all of those that had broken away from the type were of exactly the same habit. This fern certainly well deserved the award of merit which was given. T. Rochford & Sons recently showed one of the most beautiful forms which we have had since the introduction of N. Piersoni from America, the fronds being short and broad, and the multiple pinnules overlapping each other and slightly twisted. This was given a first-class certificate. Piersoni, though a beautiful fern, has not sold so well in the market as might have been expected, but the above being a more compact habit should prove more useful. N. Elegantissima, an American variety which was shown at the Temple by W. J. Godfrey, is another of the same type, having broad tripinnate fronds and long narrow pinnules. From H. B. May & Sons we had N. exaltata superba. This also gained a first-class certificate. As shown it was perfect in form, the fronds standing up well, with a sufficient curve to give them elegance, all the side pinnules regularly crested, making a most elegant plant for decorations. Nephrolepis Scottii, which came from America about two years ago, is a good fern; it may best be described as a compact form of exaltata. I saw beautiful plants of this at May & Sons', a few weeks ago, but it has not yet been seen in any quantity in the market.

With the nephrolepis much depends on cultural treatment, grown under heavy shade, and in a close, moist atmosphere, they make rapid progress, but the fronds are soft. Hang them up close to the glass, give little shade, and not too much heat, and they make short hard fronds which will stand well when used for decorations; under the two different treatments they appear to be quite distinct ferns. They are getting better known now, but a few years ago they were regarded by many as being too tender to be of service for ordinary decorations, now we see them used for baskets hanging out under balconies and in other exposed positions, and it is remarkable how well they stand exposure.

PENTAS CARNEA.

Introduced over 60 years ago, it is surprising that this plant, whose cultural requirements are of the simplest, should be so much neglected by the majority of present-day gardeners. Pentas carnea Quartiniana is an improvement on the type, and is the one most usually grown. Cuttings of the young growths inserted in sandy soil, and placed in a little heat, make roots readily at any time; but, if inserted in the spring, good plants for autumn and winter flowering may be obtained. When rooted they should be hardened off and grown on during the summer in cold frames, removing them to the greenhouse before the cold weather arrives. They are not fastidious as to soil, a light, loamy mixture suiting them perfectly. Six-inch pots are large enough for all ordinary purposes, and good, useful plants may be grown in 4-inch pots, provided attention is given to the watering and feeding of the plants. The plant is of a somewhat straggling habit, and should be pinched occasionally. A few light fumigations will keep down fly, which otherwise is apt to be troublesome.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

I WANT to thank the REVIEW for the many orders it has brought me.—S. J. MCMICHAEL, Findlay, O.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y.—John Lawrence has completed two houses of King construction 21x100. One house is planted to roses, the other to carnations and, although planted late, both are showing up fine. He has also built a new brick boiler-house and installed a forty-five horse-power steam boiler, heating a block of old houses of about 10,000 feet of glass as well as the new ones. Trade is good. Mums are about cleaned up.

RADIATION.

We have in view a horizontal steam boiler with dimensions as follows: Length, seven and one-half feet; diameter, thirty inches; twenty-four 3-inch flues; grate surface, 30x40 inches. How many feet of radiation will it care for?

H. & C.

The boiler in question, if set and used as a return tubular boiler, will have a capacity to care for about 1,600 square feet of radiation. L. C. C.

BIG TUBES.

I have a boiler 4x18 with twelve 6-inch tubes. Will there be any economy in using this style boiler for heating greenhouses, either with steam or hot water? How many square feet of radiation will this boiler heat for zero weather or 10 degrees below zero? How many runs of 2-inch pipe should I use on the side walls of three or four connected even-span greenhouses, each 35x150, side walls five feet high? I am using 3-inch and 3½-inch flow-pipe. Which system is better, the gravity or pressure?

W. E. B.

While I have had no experience with a boiler of this type, it is the pattern quite extensively used on river boats and in mills where wood fuel is employed. I am inclined to believe it would prove satisfactory for either steam or hot water, perhaps better for hot water than for steam. The boiler in question should carry about 2,600 square feet of radiation. The houses in question, 35x150 feet, should each have seventeen runs of 2-inch pipe if hot water is used at 180 degrees. For such a plant on a hot-water basis I should not trust anything but a pressure system, and even then a circulating pump may prove necessary.

BUFFALO.

A Good Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving, that unique American holiday, is past once more and never to our recollection were we favored with more beautiful weather; sunshine from early morn until our globe turned too far east to see the old gentleman, the father and nourisher of all life. The queen of autumn was in good demand and those who had an abundance of fine flowers reaped a liberal harvest. Some of us were well supplied with good carnations and they found a ready sale with people who preferred quality to bulk. As usual, the sweet Viola ordorata was in great demand, and why not? The love-sick swain will not consider cost when the tender passion disturbs his manly breast. Roses were in good supply. As the season advances Richmond is winning favor. It has to be cut close, but how lovely it grows, even to the third and fourth day. We never had a better Thanksgiving. I hope that a year hence we shall have as good cause to return thanks.

At South Park.

We journeyed out to the botanic gardens a few days ago. Unfortunately Prof. Cowell had not returned from his duties as judge at Chicago's great flower show; still we enjoyed the visit greatly. We were in the company of young George E. McClure, and when Tom Fitzgerald, Mr. Cowell's superintendent of the conservatory, joined us there was such a buzzing of botanical names of orchids, cycads and other genera that I succumbed and was carried to the nearest drug store, where they gave me a decoction of bromo seltzer, although I had asked for an extract of bromeliacea. This botanic garden is poorly supported by our city fathers, yet it is one of the finest ranges of glass in the country and contains a splendid collection of economic plants as well as showy and ornamental plants. With the funds at his command Mr. Cowell has done wonders.

The chrysanthemum exhibition was beautiful as well as instructive and attracted large crowds of visitors, as most free shows do. Botanic gardens were not instituted for amusement. They are for study and instruction, yet here is to be found plenty to please the eye alone, as well as the student who wishes to become familiar with the vegetable kingdom, be it a native oak, a humble campanula, or a nepenthes of Sumatra.

though conditions warranted more than ever before a day devoted to grateful recognition. Shipping orders supplied the largest part of the demand earlier in the week, but Wednesday the city trade began to affect the market. The dealers and growers have again come to the conclusion that some preparation should be made for this holiday.

Chrysanthemums were the most in demand, and, while the supply was apparently plentiful in most grades, all were sold. There was a heavy demand for American Beauty roses, and none too many of these were seen anywhere. There was just about enough tea roses to go around, pink being the most sought after. Richmond and Liberty also had a fair call and sold well. Carnations were hardly heavy enough to meet the demands, and many of the stores were sold out by noon. As yet the cut is hardly of sufficient quantity to supply the trade, while quality is good. The prices were not prohibitive in any line, 75 cents and $1 per dozen being the ruling price for carnations. Violets were called for later in the day and found ready sale, although the price has advanced, they now selling at from 75 cents to $1.50 per hundred wholesale.

Some of the larger stores were showing poinsettias and azaleas, and the prospects are for a good crop of these for the holidays. Narcissus is now coming in, and of fine quality, also stevia.

Greenhouse Heating.

RADIATION.

We have in view a horizontal steam boiler with dimensions as follows: Length, seven and one-half feet; diameter, thirty inches; twenty-four 3-inch flues; grate surface, 30x40 inches. How many feet of radiation will it care for?

H. & C.

The boiler in question, if set and used as a return tubular boiler, will have a capacity to care for about 1,600 square feet of radiation.

L. C. C.

BIG TUBES.

I have a boiler 4x18 with twelve 6-inch tubes. Will there be any economy in using this style boiler for heating greenhouses, either with steam or hot water? How many square feet of radiation will this boiler heat for zero weather or 10 degrees below zero? How many runs of 2-inch pipe should I use on the side walls of three or four connected even-span greenhouses, each 35x150, side walls five feet high? I am using 3-inch and 3½-inch flow-pipe. Which system is better, the gravity or pressure?

W. E. B.

While I have had no experience with a boiler of this type, it is the pattern quite extensively used on river boats and in mills where wood fuel is employed. I am inclined to believe it would prove satisfactory for either steam or hot water, perhaps better for hot water than for steam. The boiler in question should carry about 2,600 square feet of radiation. The houses in question, 35x150 feet, should each have seventeen runs of 2-inch pipe if hot water is used at 180 degrees. For such a plant on a hot-water basis I should not trust anything but a pressure system, and even then a circulating pump may prove necessary.

BUFFALO.

A Good Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving, that unique American holiday, is past once more and never to our recollection were we favored with more beautiful weather; sunshine from early morn until our globe turned too far east to see the old gentleman, the father and nourisher of all life. The queen of autumn was in good demand and those who had an abundance of fine flowers reaped a liberal harvest. Some of us were well supplied with good carnations and they found a ready sale with people who preferred quality to bulk. As usual, the sweet Viola ordorata was in great demand, and why not? The love-sick swain will not consider cost when the tender passion disturbs his manly breast. Roses were in good supply. As the season advances Richmond is winning favor. It has to be cut close, but how lovely it grows, even to the third and fourth day. We never had a better Thanksgiving. I hope that a year hence we shall have as good cause to return thanks.

At South Park.

We journeyed out to the botanic gardens a few days ago. Unfortunately Prof. Cowell had not returned from his duties as judge at Chicago's great flower show; still we enjoyed the visit greatly. We were in the company of young George E. McClure, and when Tom Fitzgerald, Mr. Cowell's superintendent of the conservatory, joined us there was such a buzzing of botanical names of orchids, cycads and other genera that I succumbed and was carried to the nearest drug store, where they gave me a decoction of bromo seltzer, although I had asked for an extract of bromeliacea. This botanic garden is poorly supported by our city fathers, yet it is one of the finest ranges of glass in the country and contains a splendid collection of economic plants as well as showy and ornamental plants. With the funds at his command Mr. Cowell has done wonders.

The chrysanthemum exhibition was beautiful as well as instructive and attracted large crowds of visitors, as most free shows do. Botanic gardens were not instituted for amusement. They are for study and instruction, yet here is to be found plenty to please the eye alone, as well as the student who wishes to become familiar with the vegetable kingdom, be it a native oak, a humble campanula, or a nepenthes of Sumatra.

though conditions warranted more than ever before a day devoted to grateful recognition. Shipping orders supplied the largest part of the demand earlier in the week, but Wednesday the city trade began to affect the market. The dealers and growers have again come to the conclusion that some preparation should be made for this holiday.

Chrysanthemums were the most in demand, and, while the supply was apparently plentiful in most grades, all were sold. There was a heavy demand for American Beauty roses, and none too many of these were seen anywhere. There was just about enough tea roses to go around, pink being the most sought after. Richmond and Liberty also had a fair call and sold well. Carnations were hardly heavy enough to meet the demands, and many of the stores were sold out by noon. As yet the cut is hardly of sufficient quantity to supply the trade, while quality is good. The prices were not prohibitive in any line, 75 cents and $1 per dozen being the ruling price for carnations. Violets were called for later in the day and found ready sale, although the price has advanced, they now selling at from 75 cents to $1.50 per hundred wholesale.

Thanksgiving Trade.

A comparison of opinions would place our Thanksgiving business at about the average of past years. Perhaps we all expected too much of an increase over last season. Be this as it may, there was plenty of stock for all comers, with a surplus left. Prices held well all through the week, especially for chrysanthemums. Outside of Beauties, roses went comparatively slow, and carnations not over well. Plants had quite a run.

The Florists' Club.

Our club held its regular meeting November 27. President Stephens was in the chair, and a goodly number of members were present. The committees on the recent chrysanthemum show reported that financially the exhibition was a success. The proposed change of the annual convention of the S. A. F., from August to some date in the autumn, was fully discussed. The club voted unanimously for the summer meetings. Three active members were admitted, E. B. Milnor, Charles Buehler and Wesley A. Hamm. M. B. Faxon offered a special prize for the best pot plant exhibited at the next meeting of the club.

Various Notes.

E. F. Jones, at Linden, has been, the last ten days, sending here some well finished chrysanthemums. He has also been busy at his stand on the Central market.

Nursery stock is still selling in good volume, the ground being still open. The long selling season we have had will make this autumn's total business unusually large.

C. A. Roth reports an especial rush of funeral orders the last few days.

John H. Williams, who this season has made a specialty of Major Bonnaffon, supplied some elegant stock for the Thanksgiving trade.

Sam Graff, of Graff Bros., who spent two weeks in Chicago looking out for a holiday supply of stock, returned in time to take part in the Thanksgiving rush.

John R. Hellenthal has been having a popular price sale of Boston ferns and rubber plants.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. held its annual Thanksgiving chrysanthemum show last week.

Owen Harbage has been appointed receiver for the Columbus Pottery Co. by Judge Evans.

Superintendent James Underwood, of the city's greenhouses at Franklin park, reports that thousands of persons this season have enjoyed the chrysanthemums.

Prof. A. F. Burgess, who is the chief inspector of orchards and nurseries in the Ohio state agricultural department, was elected president of the National Association of Orchard Inspectors at its annual meeting at Baton Rouge, La., last week. This honor came entirely unsolicited, Prof. Burgess not being present at the meeting. ZERO.

I have been a reader of the REVIEW for a number of years, and don't see how any grower can do without it.—GEO. W. FAGAN, Cedar Falls, Ia.

YOUR paper increases in value month by month, and I look for it each Saturday.—R. S. BENNETT, Lynn, Mass.

"Always safe and reliable. Ask your friends."

CALDWELL TANKS AND TOWERS

J. F. Perkins, Portland, Me.

supply you with plenty of water for your greenhouse and gardens. No danger of finding tank half empty through leaking when you want water the most.

The best quality of Cypress, from the Louisiana swamps, with superior workmanship and scientific hooping, keeps our tanks from leaking or bursting. The weight and strength of our steel towers make their stability as great as that of the heaviest bridge construction.

Caldwell Outfits give the maximum of service with the minimum of repair. Their first cost is small; their lasting qualities are great. Don't fail to get illustrated catalogue and learn more about them.

H AND C

ON THE LOOKOUT

The florist is a progressive chap—wants new things—things that give him an advantage over the man without them or makes competition possible with the man with them. But there are a few time-tried things that are so simple, so good, so sure, it costs you money and experience to change. Our ventilating apparatus is one of these things—no criss-cross levers—no chains or cables—just the gear and arm principle. Easy to put up—easy to operate.

The Test of Durability

DURABILITY in greenhouse material is of first importance. It is expensive and tiresome to be constantly rebuilding and repairing—trying to patch up houses built of poor material.

If you want lasting houses get material that stands the test. Our cypress material will stand the most critical examination or comparison. "Time waits for no man"—send for catalogue and estimate today.

IT'S UP HILL WORK

This trying to compete with the chap who has an almost shade free house when yours is a regular "shade trap." We don't want to "knock" anybody else's construction, but we do want you to know why ours is so good.

Take a look at this view of the eave line with our angle iron eave plate and sashbar clasps — do you know of a construction even half as light? Well then suppose it is half as light, how about its endurance? We know that wooden joints at the eave line are quick to rot and that our wood and galvanized iron joints are lasters.

We sell our angle iron eave plate with sashbars attached and spaced ready for immediate erection. Put them in your next house for it's only a matter of whether you want the other chap's house with his kind of eave joint as a "temporary fix" or ours as LASTERS.

Send for our Catalog before you get the "fix."

NOW.

1906

HE HAS CROWED
EVERY MORNING
AT 6 O'CLOCK
FOR 19 YEARS.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

and never louder and clearer than today. What do you think he crows about? In all these years he has'nt missed a morning, disappointed a grower, failed to send a weekly check on time, or given any cause to make an enemy. A bird like this deserves to live to a ripe old age. And he will. Now listen! You growers of Roses, Violets, Carnations, Valley, Orchids and every variety of Cut Flowers, you can't do better anywhere than here. We have room for a few more of you.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS.

The Prospects.

All the conditions are right for a wonderful Christmas trade this year. For the last half dozen years the volume of Christmas business has been steadily increasing, keeping step with the general prosperity of the country at large. Flowers being so distinctly a luxury to the great mass of the people, lean years for the working classes are comparatively barren years for the florists, but with everybody else doing business our trade does not fail to experience its share of prosperity; indeed, since the time when the average family has found its daily necessities supplied, the development of the greenhouse industry has been such as to surprise, not only those who are mere recorders of the general prosperity, but those who are closest in touch with conditions in our trade. The way the scriptural green bay tree flourished is not an illuminating comparison for the way our trade has thriven.

This season finds the farmer prosperous as never before; it finds the railroads taxed to the limit of their greatly enlarged facilities, their earnings greater than ever, their payrolls swollen by recent raises in wages; it finds factories working overtime and unable to keep pace with orders; it finds industry hampered by the lack of operatives to carry on the business of the day; it finds the whole country so completely employed that so good a business man as Sir Thomas Lipton, after a trip from New York to Omaha, declared that the whole history of the world shows no record of such great industrial activity as now prevails in the United States. Yes, it is going to be a good Christmas.

Trend of Trade.

In the last half dozen years there has been noted a pronounced change in the trend of holiday trade, which, now that it has spread from the leading stores in New York outward through succeeding stages until it has reached the levels where art is not the means to the end we all desire, is showing the inevitable reflex action. But plants, having come into so great popularity for Christmas and Easter, never can be entirely displaced—they serve too good a purpose. Indeed, although the men who led in the artistic embellishment and sale of plants as a holiday substitute for cut flowers are now turning their attention elsewhere, still thousands of those who do not depend upon originality for their business standing will this Christmas handle more plants than ever.

The vogue which plants have enjoyed at the holidays in the last few years probably was due as much to the difficulties of procuring enough satisfactory cut flowers as it was to the skilful use made of plants by the bright men who turned to them, not only as a means of satisfying the call for novelty, but as a means of increasing the amount of salable stock at a time when demand exceeded supply. And now plants will drop to a secondary place (if, indeed, they ever held first), not so much because the novelty has worn off as because the supply of cut flowers has become more nearly equal to holiday requirements; because cut flower growers are beginning to appreciate the suicidal folly of pickling, and because the enterprise that makes Rhinebeck violets an important item of stock in Chicago has made it possible for the wholesalers to satisfactorily supply the needs of retailers at the most distant points.

Importance of Requisites.

The popularity of plants was only achieved by virtue of the skilful use of the innumerable aids provided by the indefatigable dealers in florists' supplies. While it may be that the vogue for plants is on the wane in leading stores, it is certain that the use of artistic requisites is only at a beginning, for so great is the ingenuity of those engaged in their manufacture that it is impossible to find a place in which no one of these useful articles can be used without improved effect and generally increased profit. The supply dealer gets his share of the profit when the birth baskets go to mother and child, when the young man sends a bunch of violets to his lady love, when the wedding bells are rung, and when life's journey's done, to say nothing of our recurring Christmases and Easters and other happy occasions.

Especially at Christmas are requisites necessary and profitable. Many a bunch of violets may be made to sell a fancy hamper; many a cut flower order may be made to include ribbons at as great a profit as is made on the flowers; every deft addition of inexpensive embellishment adds to the satisfaction of your service, and when it comes to plants it is next to impossible to sell them at all except with some sort of decoration, if it be no more than a paper pot cover. In nearly every case the addition of the requisites adds to the selling value of the stock to such an extent that the profit on the supplies is a better percentage than is made on plants or flowers.

A Case in Point.

Take boxwood, for instance. The illustration gives only a poor idea of the attractiveness of the arrangement because the colors cannot be shown. As everyone knows, the boxwood is dark, lustrous green. The receptacle is the Pompeian ware, light green, unglazed, making a good contrast. The ribbon is holly red. The whole effect was such that the Chicago store that provided 100 of these for last Christmas sold them all at $2.50 each.

Now let us examine the cost: Plant, 25 cents; jar, 25 cents; ribbon, 10 cents; total cost, 60 cents each. They were designed to sell for $2, but they looked so good an extra 50 cents was added and readily obtained. Where general expenses are less than in a big city, and where cost of delivery is less, this might be sold at $1.25 to $1.50 and a satisfactory profit obtained. The plant in an ordinary pot, without embellishment, hardly would be salable at any price.

The Araucaria.

The araucaria is a good Christmas plant, because of the harmony of colors when it is embellished with holly red. The plant illustrated is Araucaria robusta compacta, less tall in proportion to its breadth than is A. excelsa. The addition of a couple of the Alpha Christmas bells, a few bows of narrow red ribbon, a birchbark, metal-lined box and the arrangement is good for $10 in a first-class city store at Christmas. Where a less wealthy trade is catered to a lower price would be necessary if any number were to be sold, but the same store that sold this decorated plant for $10 last Christmas only asked $4 apiece for the plants left unsold, so you can see that the combination of the holiday demand, the bells and the ribbon, was worth about $6. It is the same with all such arrangements, although the margin of profit is not so great in all, and, in fact, possibly it is better for the purposes of steady demand that it is not.

Another Good Seller.

The erica shown in another of the illustrations accompanying this article was a good seller last Christmas. The pot was covered with Porto Rican matting and tied with red chiffon, a bow of the same in the front. It looked to be easily worth the $5 or $6 asked, and a number of similar arrangements will readily suggest themselves to anyone who is making up a stock for holiday trade.

One advantage of the plant arrangement is that samples may be made up for stock display, and no more prepared until orders are booked; then they may be made up in spare time, ready for delivery. Thus the work does not all come at the last moment, nor is made-up stock left unsold.

Boxwood in Pompeian Ware.

Poinsettia Arrangements.

Pans and baskets of poinsettias are a staple item of Christmas stock. Pans with low-growing plants, say eighteen inches high, may be embellished with all sorts of pot covers and sell readily. Where good trade is handled a better profit may be made by transferring the plants to a basket and amplifying the decoration. The one pictured was a long, low handled basket of light green, such as any supply house sells at a dollar or so. Two of the small Alpha bells were added. The handle was supplied with a big bow of red ribbon and one of the country's leading retailers got $12 for the job last Christmas. When it is considered that there were three poinsettias and a few adiantums in the basket it may be appreciated that the good taste shown in the arrangement was a very profitable part of the work.

Plant Hampers.

In the last few seasons plant hampers of small size, for filling with adiantums, cocos, selaginellas, cypripediums, etc., have had a good sale. They are usually square, or nearly so. Some are made of dyed raffia, some are braided, and the more expensive are of silk or velvet. The one illustrated was green and red, with a velvet poinsettia on the cover and a bow of wide red ribbon. These are not useful except where first-class trade is handled, for $12 to $15 is usually the price for one well filled.

Baby Ramblers.

The Baby Rambler rose is a splendid thing for Christmas. Because of its dwarf growth it lends itself to all sorts of arrangements, but possibly to nothing better than to use with the twig baskets. The color of the basket adds to the effect. In the one illustrated the basket was long and the handle so low that it was obscured by the trusses of bloom. Selaginellas and asparagus were used to fill in between the basket and the roses. The handle was tied with a big bow of watered silk ribbon. This was a large basket and sold for $15 in a metropolitan store, but similar arrangements may be made, smaller in size, to cost only a dollar or two and sell for whatever margin of profit the trade will stand.

Birchbark Ware.

Birchbark ware has undergone many improvements since it first was put on the market and is now among the best of staple articles. It is in especial demand at Christmas and Easter. It may be used in so many ways that it is not necessary to recount them. One of the illustrations in this issue is a box nearly four times as long as it is wide. The coloring of the bark is of itself an attraction. It contrasts well with the green of the selaginellas, asparagus, primulas and cyclamens, the flowers of the latter red and white. A green ribbon bow was used. These arrangements may be made up in size and material to sell at from 50 cents to $10 and for a cheap, ready seller there is not much to beat them.

The Braided Basket.

A staple basket is the one of braided colored straw. It comes in handy every day in the year and if not sold for

It is capable of being filled with almost any stock at hand and is such an article as should always be on hand in a variety of sizes and colors in every retail store.

SPORTS.

[A paper by Patrick O'Mara, read before the Horticultural Society of New York, December 12, 1906.]

It is with much misgiving as to my fitness for the task that I approach this subject, and willingly would I forego it entirely. It is to be hoped that at some future meeting some one competent to deal with it from its scientific aspect will be found who will address this body on the subject and treat it exhaustively, as I believe there are many of us who are intensely interested in it. The possibility that I may say something which will induce a further ventilation of the subject here is probably the motive which impels me to venture into it now. It is not my purpose to broadly consider the question of sports, but only to confine myself to a few of the leading varieties of cultivated plants which have originated in that manner, with possibly a passing reference to a few noted "seed sports," so popularly designated to distinguish them from those which have been produced by bud variation.

Definition of Sports.

A "sport," as popularly understood among florists and gardeners, is that portion of a plant which assumes one or more characteristics essentially different from the rest of the plant, either in flower, foliage or habit. The vexed question among gardeners and florists is how this change takes place, to what prime cause can it be ascribed. I candidly confess to knowing little of what science has imparted on the subject, but that little leads me to believe that nothing definite has been enunciated.

The preponderance of opinion, as far as I have noticed it, seems to be that sporting is due mainly to conditions of growth, or to put it in one word, environment. This cause is not accepted by the vast majority of growers as responsible for the phenomena of sports, the general belief being that it lies in the blood, to use the vernacular, or, to put it in one word, heredity.

Environment or Heredity.

In his paper presented to this society March 8, 1904, Prof. L. C. Corbett said: "Sporting, then, may be encouraged by extreme conditions. Either extreme feeding or extreme poverty may induce plants to sport. Severe changes in climate or soil conditions may result in decided changes in stature, habits of growth and fruitfulness, which are as marked attributes of a sport as are changes in the color of foliage or fruit."

This is undoubtedly true in the abstract, but it is when brought to bear on concrete cases that it fails to fully satisfy. If by extreme feeding is meant the culture given to roses, for example, by florists and gardeners, when forced under glass for winter flowering, the question arises why more sports are not developed. When thousands of growers are forcing the same variety, it is not always the one who is feeding his crop the heaviest that finds it produces a sport. The fact, too, that a few varieties alone have displayed sportive tendencies to the extent of producing new sorts, strengthens the conviction that the cause lies in the blood.

Rose Sports.

The rose Catherine Mermet has been the most prolific in sports of the many which have been grown for cut flowers. Its greatest descendants as sports are The Bride and Bridesmaid, the latter displacing the parent entirely. If feeding was the prime cause, why did not many growers find a Bride and a Bridesmaid? Catherine Mermet also produced Waban and, I think, one or two other sports which have disappeared. Parti-colored sports have appeared occasionally in The Bride and now a grower has one beautifully striped white and pink, the latter being the Bridesmaid color and largely predominating.

Maman Cochet produced a white sport, and in this connection I would say that when a neutral shade like pink is produced, it seems that the combination which produced it carries with it the tendency at some time to produce a white sport. The rose we know as American Beauty has produced two pink sports—American Belle and Queen of Edgely—and it is not too much to expect that from these if largely grown would emerge a white sport.

From the rose Safrano came the yellow sport, Isabella Sprunt, and from Perle des Jardins came Sunset; from the latter, I believe, came Lady Dorothea; from Golden Gate came Ivory; from Bon Silene came the striped rose, American Banner, which in addition to the change in flower showed a marked change in foliage, being decidedly rugose. The latter characteristic is slowly disappearing under propagation; in fact, has almost vanished at the present time. Caprice, Striped La France and other striped roses coming from neutral tinted sorts, coupled with the fact that the other sports enumerated follow in the same line, are sufficient warrant for the belief that the combination which resulted in the parent sorts laid the foundation for the sports which resulted from them, and that the manner of growth had no part in it as a prime cause.

Cycle in Bouvardia.

The sporting cycle in bouvardia is very interesting and in results it exactly parallels the examples set forth relating to the rose. From B. Hogarth, a deep scarlet variety, issued B. elegans, a lighter-colored form, and from that issued B. Davidsonii, a pure white. It is interesting to note that two white sports originated at the same time, one in Greenville, now Jersey City, N. J., with Mr. Vreeland and offered as B. Vreelandii, the other B. Davidsonii. They were identical and as the Davidsonii was first on the market the other name was dropped. The original stock of B. elegans in both cases was purchased from Peter Henderson and the conclusion arrived at then was that the elements of change were contained in the plants, and that it would occur under any circumstances.

Subsequently a double white and a double pink variety were produced as sports, and later a dwarf variety, White Bouquet, sported from B. Vreelandii with William Bock, of Cambridge, Mass., who retained the old nomenclature (Vreelandii), having the same flowers as the parent, but a dwarf, bushy habit, about a foot high when in flower.

The fact that these sports were progressive in color leads to the belief that the cause for their appearance was within the plant rather than that their coming was brought about by outside forces. As bouvardias are largely propagated by root cuttings, it strengthens this belief.

Salvia and Abutilon.

An instance where at a bound a white sport issued from a scarlet variety is found in Salvia splendens alba. From Salvia splendens, at the base of the tube in the latter is always found a bleached white, which extends less or more beyond the sheath; therefore, the white sport seems a natural progression, as the subsequent striped sport is.

The double abutilon, a sport from A. Thompsonii and identical in its variegated foliage and color of flowers, is the only case of sporting which I can recall in that plant, although widely grown.

Progression in Colors.

The carnation sports are numerous and here again they are progressive. I can not recall, for instance, where a yellow issued from a red or white, or a white from a yellow or a crimson. It is when neutral shades are reached that sporting begins. The same is true of chrysanthemums and to a lesser extent of dahlias, both of which are very prolific in sports. It seems to be along well-defined lines of color changes then that sporting follows, and the layman may well be pardoned when he arrives at the conclusion that it is in the blood and is not brought about by growing conditions. If the latter theory was correct it seems to me there would be no limit to sports, while the limitations seem to be arbitrarily fixed, which is not the case with seminal reproduction.

When Habit Changes.

Another phase of sporting is when the habit of the plant is changed, some examples of which I have alluded to previously. Climbing roses issue frequently from dwarf sorts, particularly in the monthly class. As far as I can recall, the flower in such cases is always identical with the parent. In the hybrid perpetual, and hybrid tea classes, too, climbing sports are produced, but there is a difference very marked from the monthly sports. The latter are easily fixed and never run back, while the others to the best of my knowledge are never absolutely fixed, and thus are constant reversions, temporary and permanent, in individual plants.

The foliage sports are many, but I will only mention one, viz., the Golden Bedder coleus, which resulted as a sport from Lady Burrill, a variety with harlequin markings of dark red and yellow. It has never reverted.

While on the subject of coleus, I cannot forbear from referring to a marked instance of the occurrence, wide apart, of a similar break in this plant. The golden-leaved coleus originated in England and was imported by Peter Henderson. Before the plants arrived seedlings raised from seed saved on the place from the old, dark-leaved sorts developed some golden varieties.

Seed Sports.

In Prof. Corbett's paper, already quoted from, he says: "Burpee's dwarf lima bean is a good example of a sport where the habit of the plant was markedly changed." This brings us into the realm of seed sports, wider and more complex than the other, and I do not mean to explore it to any extent.

Prof. Bailey is authority for the statement that: "Bud variation and seed variation are one in kind;" and again: "I am ready to say that I believe bud variation to be one of the most significant and important phenomena of vegetable life, and that it is due to the same causes, operating in essentially the same way, which underlie all variations in the plant world." Again he observes: "I want to express my conviction that mere sports are rarely useful. Sports are no doubt the result of very unusual or complex stimuli or of unwonted refrangibility of the energy of growth, and not having been induced by conditions which act uniformly over a course of time they are likely to be transient." Again: "The vexed questions associated with bud variation are not yet greatly elucidated." Again: "All these conclusions prove the unwisdom of endeavoring to account for the evolution of all the forms of life upon any single hypothesis; and they illustrate with greater emphasis the complexity of even the fundamental forces in the progression of organic nature." Again: "Now this matter of bud variation has been a most puzzling one to all writers upon evolution who have touched upon it. It long ago seemed to me to be inexplicable, but it is no more unintelligible than seminal variation of plants."

The Aristocrat of Plant Arrangements.

Birchbark Box of Cyclamens and Selaginella.

These quotations from "The Survival of the Unlike" are introduced to show how contradictory even an eminent authority on the subject can be, at least so it appears to me, a layman. If I understand him at all, it is to the effect that all sports are the result mainly of the conditions under which the subjects are grown; that all variations are of a sportive character; that the difference between well-cultivated and poorly-cultivated plants is a sportive one.

The average florist and gardener is hardly prepared to accept that view; perhaps the reasoning is too subtle for him to follow. He knows that no cultivation of which he is master can make a poor variety as good as a good one; he knows that sports, as he understands them, are sporadic and many believe that by a careful study of heredity on the part of scientists the law governing sports might be discovered.

The Dwarf Bean.

But to return to the lima bean. Here again we find a cycle of change. Three sports appeared within a very short time, almost simultaneously, viz., Kummerle's, subsequently called Dreer's; Henderson's, the latter appearing with several growers at the same time, and Burpee's. Of the origin of the first two I have no specific knowledge; they merely happened; but as to the last, the raiser (I had almost said the creator) claimed that a horse trod on a plant while it was young, that it never grew to be a climber, and that the beans reproduced dwarf plants. This was generally known in the trade and more than one grower crippled vine plants in an effort to develop a dwarf, but without success.

The White Plume celery is another notable example of a seed sport, and once the break came others followed.

Fern Sports.

I had almost forgotten to mention the latest and most interesting forms of sporting, viz., the ferns which have sported from the Boston variety. If I remember correctly, when that variety first made its appearance, there was considerable discussion as to what it really was, and it was finally classified as a sport from Nephrolepis exaltata.

Darwin said: "Of all the causes which induce variability, excess of food, whether or not changed in nature, is probably the most powerful." Here again we have the food question. The florist and gardener believes that the amount of food which will bring his crop to the highest perfection is not excessive; possibly he is wrong. The excessive amount is that which will cause deterioration, and it is not under such conditions that sports have appeared with him. It might not serve any useful purpose, yet it seems to promise an interesting field of study for some of our scientists to thoroughly examine into sports obtained through bud variation under domestication in an effort to clear away the mists which now surround their origin.

TROUBLE WITH MIGNONETTE.

Can you tell us what to do with our bench of mignonette? The seeds were sown the latter part of July in solid beds and we left three and four plants in each hill. They were not pinched back, as I was told we would get better blooms by growing them that way, and now the plants are three feet high and touch the glass. We have bent them over, but they keep growing up. The center stalk is very strong and the side shoots are about the size of a lead-pencil and we can just see the bud in some of them, while the center stalks have buds the size of a silver quarter. The frost on the glass will kill the buds. Now what we would like to know is, shall we cut the center shoots and thin the side shoots, as they are very thick? Will the second crop be all right? We feel worried about it, as we have about 600 plants and if we don't do something we will lose the entire lot. A. R. & S.

You do not say at what temperature you have kept your mignonette. From its present condition I would say that it has been too high. After wintry weather arrives and you have to depend on artificial heat, with little opportunity to give free ventilation, the temperature at night should not be over 45 degrees, and a few degrees lower will do no harm. The time of sowing was all right, but you should have left only one plant to a hill and the plants should not be closer than one foot. When the little plants were three or four inches high the center of the leading growth should have been pinched out, which would induce a strong lateral growth. By all means cut out the long center growth now. Cut down to within four or five inches of the last lateral growth and if not too hard and woody you will get more side shoots. As the lateral growths lengthen keep them tied up. This is not a big job, as a slender stake and piece of white twine loosely encircling the growths is all you want. Keep the night temperature down to 45 degrees and give ventilation on all possible occasions, even if it is only an inch crack, and that's all you can do. With this rational treatment you should cut mignonette from New Year's on to July. If you did not do it this year, please remember another year that mignonette should be planted only on a bench or bed that has the fullest exposure to light. It is useless on a shaded bench. W. S.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Winter Protection Now Needed.

At daylight Wednesday morning, December 5, the thermometer stood just at zero, and in the northern parts of New York state 14 degrees below. This is rather sudden, and reminds us that it is time to assume our heaviest overcoats and give fullest protection to our patient plants and bulbs, which we shall later bring into the greenhouse. It is well not to be too early in covering the hardy bulbs. They have been, since putting in the flats, covered with three or four inches of soil. If the frost has gone into this soil two inches all the better, but now it is time to put on five or six inches of stable litter that is mostly straw. This covering is not applied so much to protect the bulbs from injury as to prevent the whole mass, covering and flats, from freezing up tight, which makes it a troublesome and laborious job when you want to get in a few dozen flats.

Bulbous Stock.

This reminds me that if you examine your flats of Von Sion narcissi and find them well rooted, you can now bring in a supply that will do you for the next two months. I would by no means advocate this treatment in the case of early tulips, for the tulips are better left out in the cold earth until you want to put them into a forcing heat. With the narcissus it is different. You can bring them in and put the flats beneath a bench in a cool house. They will go on rooting and growing slowly and you can put them into a stronger heat to force as you desire.

Unless for special demand, don't bring in any of the early tulips before December 20. There are other flowers in abundance and if you only get fifty per cent of good tulip flowers that does not pay.

In case I should not remember to mention it in future notes, don't attempt to force tulips or the Trumpet narcissi unless you have the proper facilities, which are, for January flowering, a top heat of 80 degrees to 90 degrees with a heavy shade over them, plenty of water at the roots, but not a violent heat at the roots.

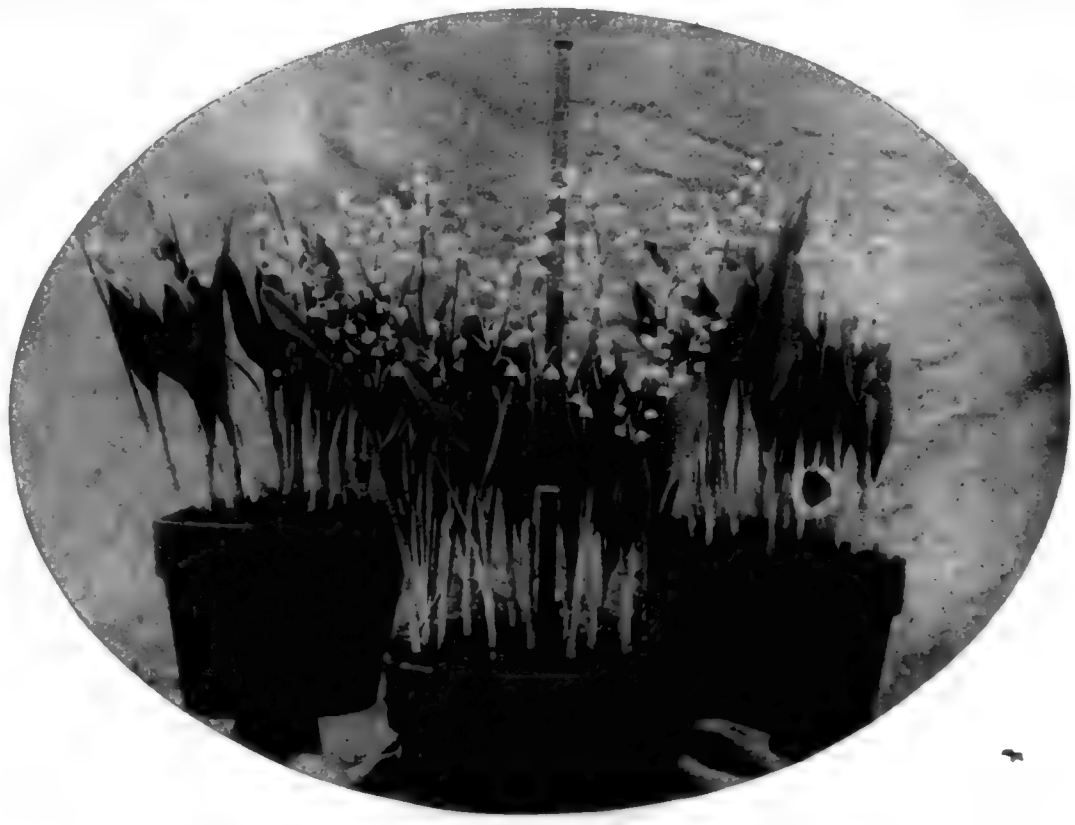
A good material for shade for covering your forcing house is ducking, which in every city can be had second-hand from people who supply this material for covering floors. If somewhat soiled, it is none the worse for our purpose.

Don't let any frost touch the bulbs or tops of Paper White narcissi and don't let much frost get at your Roman hyacinths.

Cover the Roses.

Hybrid roses that were laid down outdoors last month, and covered with three or four inches of soil, will now want a covering of leaves or long, strawy stable litter or it may be difficult to get them out about the middle of next month. That will be about the time you must get them started for the coming early Easter.

Valley for Early Use.



Lily of the valley pips that are out in frames and covered with a few inches of soil should not be exposed to frequent rains or melted snow. Whether freezing of the pips is essential we are not prepared to say. We are aware, however, that if not exposed to sudden thawing few of our plants are more hardy. For Christmas and New Year's you must rely on the cold storage stock, but the fall imported pips can be had in good flower a few days after New Year's. The conditions required by these cold storage pips and by the freshly imported ones are almost exactly opposite. The cold storage pips have been anxious to flower since last May and have been prevented because growth has been arrested by a temperature a few degrees below freezing. So anxious are they to grow that as soon as released from the cold, life and growth will start. If received from the cold storage house while the pips are actually frozen, let them thaw out slowly. Now, it is evident there is nothing in the shape of forcing needed with these retarded little flowers. The requisites are a temperature both at root and top of 50 degrees to 60 degrees, no bright flashes of sunshine and no draughts of cold air. The florist who forces hundreds of thousands of the delicate flowers knows about the process. I am writing for that more numerous class who force 5,000 or 10,000 roots from New Year's to Easter and who can begin with his first batch of November imported roots about December 15.

Case for Valley.

A few years ago I took some trouble to write up the details of a frame inside a greenhouse that was used very successfully. It was simply six inches of sand on a slate bench with four 4½-inch hot water pipes which kept the sand for early forcing up to 85 degrees. The temperature of the house was 60 degrees. We shaded with a wooden shutter for two weeks, then for the next week a shading of cheese-cloth, and the last few days gave them the full light. The frame was so arranged we could water the sand between the rows of pips without wetting the bells, a very important point. Having to use this house for forcing Easter lilies, we had to raise the temperature in March up to 70 and 75 degrees and that was too high for the valley, which became weak.

Valley Under Benches.

Last year we tried another plan which was a surprising success. It was one anybody can use who has two hot water pipes beneath the bench. We put twelve to fifteen pips in a 6-inch pot in ordinary potting soil, covered with an inch of sphagnum and placed the pots on the pipes, not actually in contact with the pipes but kept off with two pieces of lath. We used soil in preference to sand because it does not dry out so fast. We left the pots on the pipes until the bells on the flower spikes could be easily counted. Then they were lifted to the bench in the full light and carefully watered, not wetting the flowers, and shaded from bright sun. They were uniformly fine. I am sure ninety-five per cent of the pips thus treated gave us fine spikes. So there is more than one way of doing some things.

Valley Forced on Hot-water Pipes Under a Bench.

Twig Basket of Baby Rambler Roses.

I think it is a mistake to cut the roots off short. We shortened the roots only one inch. We have seen the roots chopped off to within three inches of the base of the pip and the flowers were poor.

Christmas Plants.

Whatever you need in the way of Christmas plants, procure at once. Don't delay until the last day or two and then telegraph and have to take what is left. Whatever popular flowering, fruiting or decorative plant you are short of you should buy. If in the retail business you can't afford to say, "I don't want this and that, for I have plenty of so and so." You must keep up with the fashion, even if you come out only even on the stock you have to purchase.

Storage for Greens.

Holly and ground pine soon will be arriving. Just a word now in reference to their care. If you can't unpack the green at once, then keep out of doors, but cover the sides of the crates with matting, old carpet or some material to keep daylight away, for all that is exposed to the light will turn brown. The holly tree endures frost, but that's no reason why the holly branches should be exposed to zero weather outside. Store the cases in some cool, dark room. A few degrees of frost won't hurt, but severe freezing will cause a loss of many berries, and what's holly without the berries?

Protecting Pansies.

About this time of the year we usually have something to say about covering pansies that have to face our cruel, cold and treacherous winter, but annually we hear the same dialogue in April:

"How are your pansies?"

"What's alive are looking fine, but they got winter-killed, many of them."

Go into the woods and get a load or two of evergreen boughs and place them lightly over your plants. There is no covering so good as evergreen and no evergreen so good for the purpose as the hemlock, Abies Canadensis. Its branches are broad, and spreading, and light, and curve up at the ends, so by reversing their order of growth and putting the convex shape of the branch upwards they lie lightly on the plants. Straw thinly laid over the plants may sometimes do good, and sometimes it rots the plants.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

PECKY CYPRESS.

Pecky cypress is about the most unhandsome wood one could imagine. If a person knows nothing about it, its appearance is that of being already well rotted when it is just from the mill. The holes in it are not rot, nor do they seem to be the work of borers. Just what is the cause of the ill appearance lumbermen are not able to say with certainty. But on the theory that handsome is that handsome does, greenhouse owners have taken a great liking to Pecky cypress. The big growers around Chicago are using nothing else for their bench material. The first cost is about the same as hemlock, and it lasts so much longer that the cost in the end is only a fraction of the cost of other lumber. Poehlmann Bros. Co. used 250,000 feet of Pecky cypress in the benches they built last spring. Peter Reinberg now has three cars on the track for unloading and his order for immediate delivery is 100,000 feet. The Adam Schillo Lumber Co. has 700,000 feet of Pecky cypress in Louisiana, drying for delivery between now and spring. These are boards 1x6 and from eight to twenty feet long, being selected so that they will just strike the crosspieces of benches built on posts four feet apart. Since the cypress mills have found so good a demand for Pecky cypress among greenhouse owners they have advanced the price. At Chicago it is now worth about $22 per 1,000 feet in carload lots.

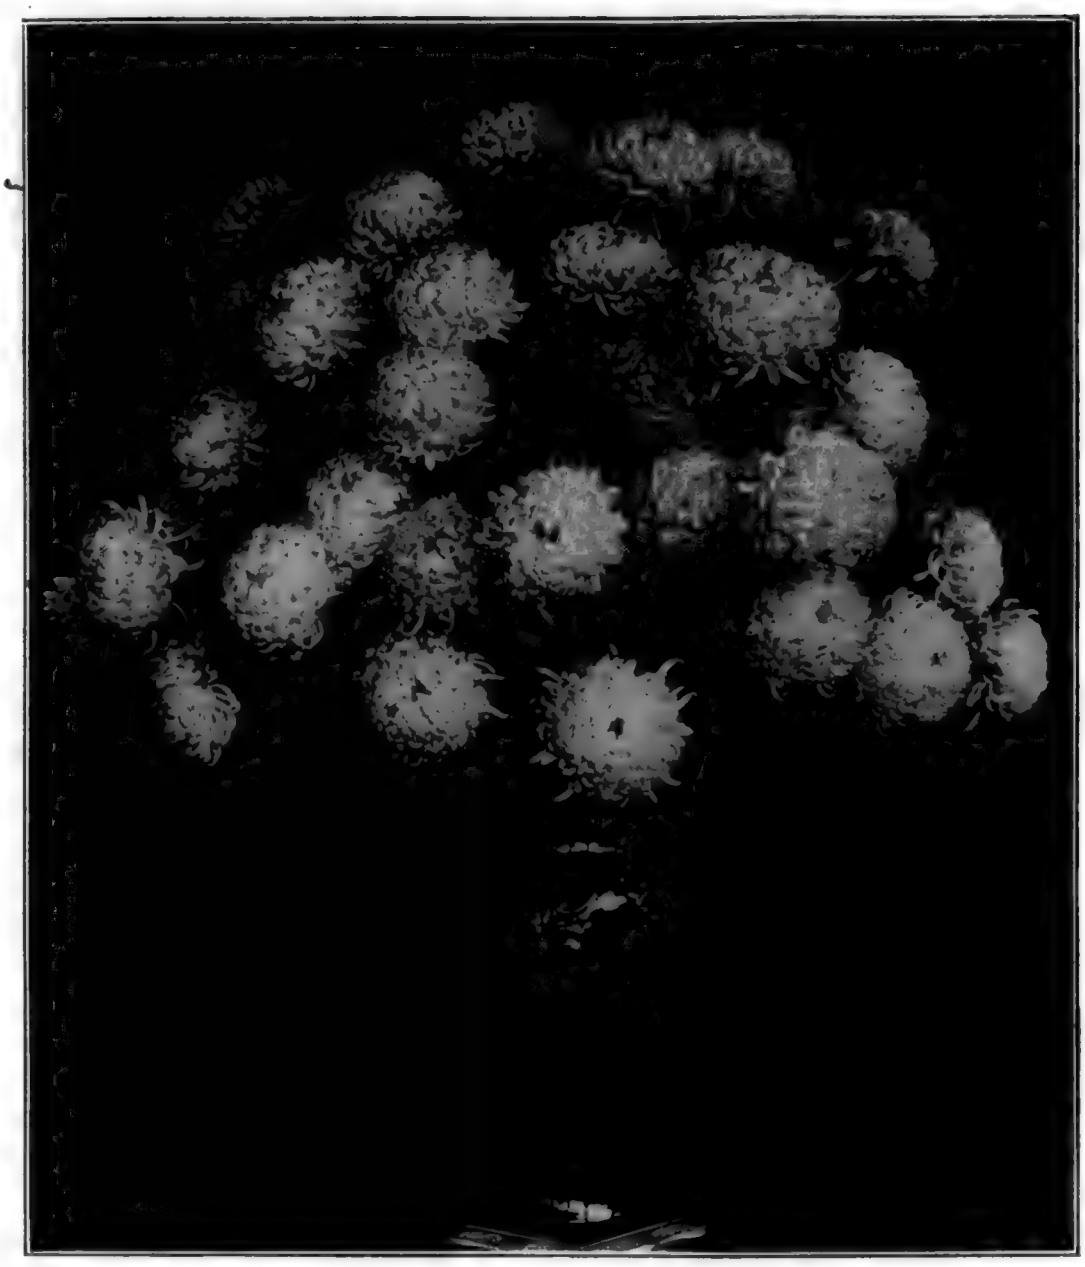
CHRYSANTHEMUMS

SALABILITY OF MUMS.

The production of chrysanthemums this season has been the greatest on record; also the season has been peculiar in that with many growers chrysanthemums were later than usual and the blooming seasons of many varieties seemed sadly mixed: the early sorts were late and in many instances the late sorts bloomed before the midseason ones were ready. The result has been that, generally speaking, the chrysanthemum season has been short; it was late in beginning and early finished.

Growers make widely varying reports as to the financial results of their chrysanthemum crops. Those who were fortunate in having early mums obtained splendid prices in practically every market throughout the country. As the midseason sorts came on the supply naturally forced prices down and at the time of the glut values were fully as low as in any previous year; in fact, in many markets it is asserted that during the height of the season the average prices were the lowest in some years. But the glut was of shorter duration than usual, and as soon as supplies shortened up prices advanced, particularly on such stock as could be called good, though a large part of the late stuff is not usable in the best trade. The late cut has again realized fair values and those who have good flowers coming on up to Christmas may rest assured of satisfactory returns.

The lesson which growers may learn from this season's experience is that the effort should be toward procuring early cuts of desirable quality and toward procuring late sorts to bloom after the midseason glut is over. There is no money in mums when they are being marketed by the million.



WHITE MAUD DEAN.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a vase of chrysanthemums which is a white sport of that splendid commercial variety, Maud Dean. We are aware that Dean has sported in other places, and an excellent authority tells us of two firms which sent out white sports of this famous variety. But are sports always identical? We believe not necessarily so. Note how widely different are the sports of our two leading florists' flowers, the rose and carnation. The two greatest roses of the day, by far the most commercially important, are each sports, having come from that fine rose, Catherine Mermet. You will remember that previous to the advent of Bridesmaid there were at least two pink sports from Catherine Mermet, which were largely tried and found wanting and dropped into the rubbish pile. Then from Bridesmaid came the glorious Bride. Then again from Mme. Cusin came Mrs. Morgan and Canadian Queen, very dissimilar. Then from the same carnation we have a great variety of sports, the Lawson in particular, and later that grand variety, Enchantress, has given us many varieties. We have used the term sport because it is brief and generally understood, but the immortal Charles Darwin in his book, "Plants and Animals Under Domestication," terms what we gardeners call a sport a bud variation, which sports truly are. It is true that bud variations usually differ little from the stock from which they came except in one important feature, and that is color, which is important to a florist, but of little value to the naturalist. In judging a horse or cow, a dog or fancy fowls, all points of the breed are considered of more value than color.

In the case of this white Maud Dean, what better character would you want for it than to know that except in color it is identical with the famous variety from which it came. It is as easy to grow; it will bear two or even three good flowers to one plant; it can be planted early or late and possesses the neat foliage, fine stem and all-round excellent habit of old Maud Dean.

Some of the flowers in the photograph show the eye and in this sport there is a faint shade of pink surrounding the eye at the base of the petals, but when given time to incurve its petals, showing no eye, it is a pure white flower. The highest character we can give it is found in the fact that our best customers or admirers of the chrysanthemum, who are willing to pay $4 or $5 a dozen for good flowers, pass by Eaton, Chadwick, Jones and other fine whites and choose this white sport. It originated with the Wm. Scott Co. four years ago, but not until last year did we realize its great value, because we did not have enough to let a few dozen come to their genuine perfection.

A BRITISH GROWER'S VIEW.

In the Special Autumn Number of the REVIEW appear notes on varieties in which C. H. Totty specially mentions Mrs. Henry Barnes. Judging by the blooms grown here it is difficult to understand how flowers of this color can be appreciated in the United States. Here it is dull, although up to the English standard in size.

Mrs. A. T. Miller is certainly the best white, either old or new, seen here this season and it is remarkable that in both your country and this it is classed as "rather early."

E. G. Hill says, on page 1713, that most of the varieties which are a success here are grown from the crown bud, while the American grower depends on the terminal. The English judges place size first, but when they write of the varieties they put color first. Hence exhibitors go for size and the terminal bud does not give it.

We are following the American method of exhibiting in vases and I trust ere long we shall give more attention to color. At present with us a variety may have beautiful color and be good in form, but unless it is large it stands no chance to win.

The form preferred by the American grower is that which is known here as an incurved Japanese, such as W. Duckham and Mrs. Jerome Jones. Flowers of this form certainly pack easily and are therefore best for the market trade, but we prefer, and I think rightly, too, a shaggy Japanese; that is, a bloom with long, drooping florets of medium width which are the making of a deep solid, yet elegant flower.

Single-flowered chrysanthemums are now much in demand, but I do not think they will ever become popular as market flowers, much as they may be appreciated by the private grower. It is quite as costly to grow these properly as it is the larger ordinary market flowers, but purchasers expect a much larger bunch for their money than is generally afforded by the single-flowered chrysanthemums.

Returning to the novelties in Japanese likely to suit the American trade, preeminently as the best stands Mary Donnellan. It is of the richest golden yellow and very brilliant, of the color of Buttercup, but superior; florets are wider and the flower is much larger, bolder and fuller than that variety. It is also right in stem and foliage. I predict great popularity for this among the American growers for several years to come.

STOCK PLANTS.

I wish to raise 2,500 chrysanthemum plants. How many stock plants will I need? Please give me a list of best paying early and best paying late sorts. A. R. W.

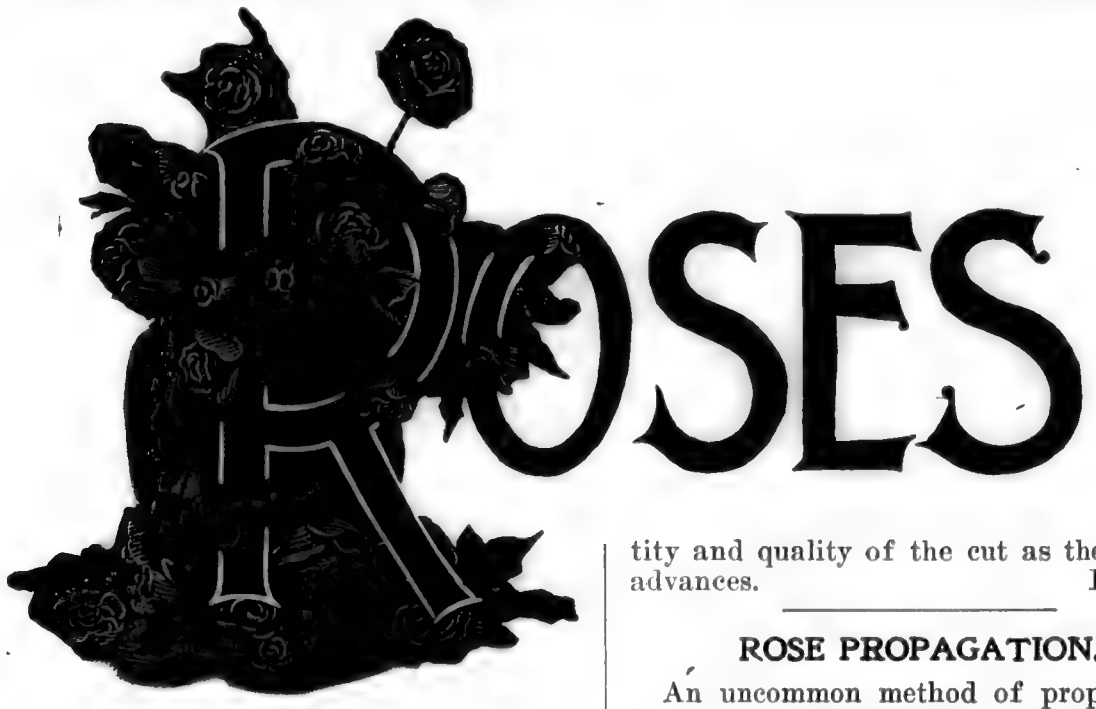
Figuring out a healthy plant to be good for twenty cuttings, A. R. W. would need 125 stock plants to furnish him with what plants he needs. Some will go above and some below, but the average should work out as given.

A list of the most largely grown would be about as follows: Early, Polly Rose, Alice Byron, C. Touset, white; Monrovia, October Sunshine, yellow; Montmort and Pacific, pinks. Late kinds, Chadwick, Eaton, Mrs. Swinburne, white; Yellow Eaton, Yellow Chadwick, Nagoya and Mrs. Geo. Beech, yellow. Maud Dean is widely grown yet for late pink, but it is very poor now. When some of the newer ones have proved their worth we may have something better. C. H. T.

An Erica in the Indispensable Porto Rican Mat.

CHRYSANTHEMUM DAKOMA.

In the REVIEW of November 20 we notice a reference to Chrysanthemum Dakoma. On the whole, the fluent pen of the editor has so arranged this announcement as to make good reading, and doubtless it is good advertisement for the variety. Yet the article is so constructed that it presents a tinge of disappointment, or at least might be so interpreted by those unfamiliar with the fact.



This is far from being our motive, for we have learned in our twenty years' experience with chrysanthemum shows to abide by the judges' decision and look happy. For want of time it is needless to go into details regarding the excellence of the committee's work. We certainly respect their judgment and are satisfied in every particular.

To our knowledge, there is no great sin in offering a variety which has not been approved by the committees. It has been done before; for instance, we sent out Ethelyn in 1903, Uncle John in 1904, and Tioga and Mayor Weaver last spring, under these conditions. In full justice to all concerned, it is only fair to state the last two mentioned were not submitted to the committees.

Certificates awarded by the C. S. A. have a tendency to increase the demand for varieties so endorsed and thus are a financial benefit to the recipient, but they do not affect the quality of the variety. There is no warranty, express or implied, that insures the same high standard when grown by others, or prevents them from being brought to a higher state of perfection.

The reason for taking this course is simply this, our present year's seedlings have given a rather large number to grow on for next season, and as our space is rather limited we had one of two things to do: either dedicate what we considered two good varieties (Dakoma and Ialene) to the dump, or disseminate them.

Our method of judging seedlings is, comparing them with other good standard sorts, and believing there is a place for both of these, have decided to send them out on their merits as they appear to us. NATHAN SMITH & SON.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Necessity for Conservatism.

During the next two months the greatest care will have to be taken to maintain vigor and health in all the varieties, as the steady firing, accompanied by short, dark days, has a debilitating effect on the plants. Crops are so short and prices so tempting that many will be induced to resort to forcing tactics to forward the cuts.

As a rule plants are in no condition at this season to bear any extra strain and the growers who resort to forcing are running a big risk of losing or materially injuring the succeeding crops. Experts have their own favorite means for hastening a crop, but with all their knowledge, care and skill there is still an element of danger which it is better to avoid if possible.

These conservative growers who exercise patience and study deliberative growing and who make the health of their plants their first consideration are more likely to have the most satisfaction at the end of the season.

Owing to the lack of sunshine, the wood and foliage are of a much softer character than usual and if the temperature is increased the trouble will be augmented and the wood for succeeding crops will be of inferior character, deficient in stamina, and will be disappointing for propagating purposes.

Ventilation at this time should receive the greatest attention, night and day, missing no opportunity to give all that the weather will permit.

Fuel being so expensive, it seems like foolishness to advise free ventilation while firing has to be kept going, but this is absolutely necessary to the health of the stock and those who will not and those who can not are sure to feel the consequences sooner or later.

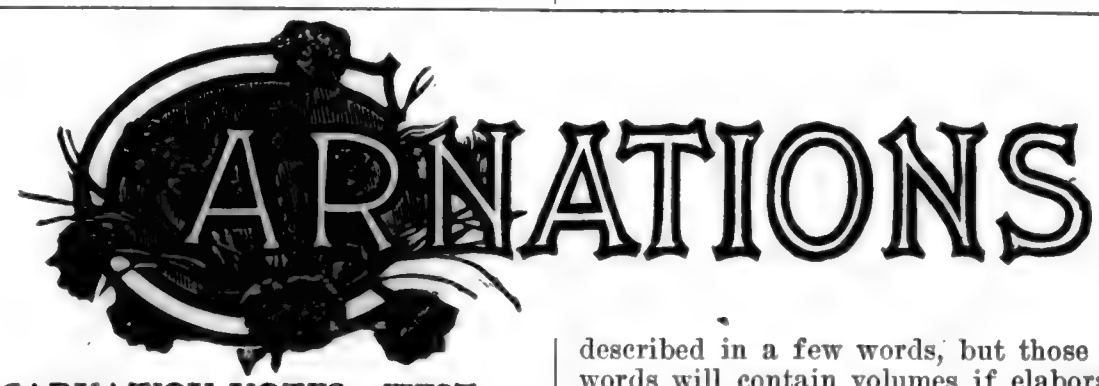
It must also be borne in mind that the vitality of the plants is now at its lowest and that they cannot use so large a supply of food, and as evaporation is also low at this season the supply of water will also have to be carefully regulated according to the limited wants of the stock. Liquid feeding once a week during bright weather will strengthen the wood and help to develop the cut.

Careful watching to ascertain the wants of the plants and to supply these at the proper season is one of the principal duties of the grower and the ability which he displays in fathoming this problem will be reflected in the quantity and quality of the cut as the season advances. Ribes.

ROSE PROPAGATION.

An uncommon method of propagating roses that are difficult to raise from cuttings is noted in the Oester-reichische Garten Zeitung for this month. In the garden of Carboni Giovanni, at Allva, in Piedmont, an interesting mode of propagating roses with the utmost certainty of them rooting consists of placing a funnel of tin on the shoot to be propagated, after ringing the rind in the month of July, and then filling the funnel with soil and moss. The ringing compels the forming of a callus; and the shoot is severed in the month of September and planted as an ordinary cutting. Our rosarians might find in this Italian method a ready means of overcoming a common occurrence in the propagation of other plants than roses.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.



The president of the Washington Florists' Club, Peter Bisset, notifies us that Mrs. S. C. Briggs offers a cash prize of $10 for six or more blooms of any new rose never before exhibited. This prize is given especially to encourage private gardeners, who would be likely to show six blooms, but would not be able, owing to limited space, to show a greater number.

The H. F. Michell Co., of Philadelphia, offers a cup valued at $25 for a vase of Richmond rose to be exhibited next March, and Miss M. L. Hammond, of Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y., offers a $5 gold-piece for the prettiest exhibition in the hall, to be decided by some three Washington ladies visiting the exhibition. Benjamin Hammond, Sec'y.

LILIUM PHILIPPINENSIS.

This new white trumpet lily seems destined to become of very great value to both private and commercial growers. The short time necessary to flower it after potting surprises all who are growing it for the first time. We found last year that it was all the introducers claimed for it and from a batch of small bulbs potted September 8 we cut flowers December 3 this year. These bulbs were grown in a coldframe for nearly half that period or would have flowered earlier.

The long, pure white, sweet scented flowers arrange beautifully in vases. The stems are sufficiently strong, without being too rigid, as is the case with other forcing liliums, and the foliage is so much more graceful than that of other lilies that any flower lover would not hesitate a moment which variety to select when both were purchasable. For floral designs this lily is superior to any other white variety and we fully expect it will in a few years be as much a market necessity as Harrisii and longiflorum now are. Six or seven bulbs may be grown in a 6-inch pot or pan and a dozen or more in an 8-inch pan for a good effect. W. N. C.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

The Art of Propagating.

What I have said in the last three numbers is what might be termed the mechanical part of propagating. Any man with ordinary judgment will readily understand how to proceed as far as getting the cuttings into the sand in first-class shape.

But now we come to the real art in propagating and I will say that it is impossible for any one to give you this information as completely as you will gain it from experience. There are so many little points and turns and tricks that one can not cover the subject completely offhand. Every morning brings its new phases and only after looking over the situation can the propagator decide on the course to be pursued that day. Each batch of cuttings will have to be handled somewhat differently, too, according to the time of the year and the kind of weather that prevails, etc.

The condition to be sought for can be described in a few words, but those few words will contain volumes if elaborated on so as to cover every detail. It is just this: keep your cuttings in a fresh condition, but wet the foliage as little as possible, and give all the light they will bear. Be sure the foliage is dry at night. If you can keep the cuttings in this condition for three to four weeks you will be sure of success. You will soon discover that it requires fine judgment to keep within the proper bounds in every direction and to not overstep in one way while trying to go the limit in another direction which may seem necessary.

Most Frequent Cause of Trouble.

Perhaps the most frequent cause of trouble, especially with beginners, is in allowing the cuttings to become wilted and it is the quickest way to ruin a batch of cuttings. A carnation cutting that is badly wilted might as well be thrown out at once. It will seldom freshen up and amount to anything and in trying to freshen it up you are apt to bring on other complications that will render it unfit even if it does finally root. So you will find, to begin with, that it is necessary to keep the sun off them, at least until they begin to root. What I mean by the sun is the warm rays that will cause wilting. When the sun first comes up in the morning and before it sets in the evening, while it sheds considerable light, yet it is not warm enough to cause any wilting and a few minutes of such light will do no harm. But be watchful at such times and do not let them have too much of it. Until you become somewhat familiar with the work you will do well to let down the curtain at first sight of the sun and raise it in the evening when the sun's rays cease to strike the cuttings. At this time of the year that will be an hour or so before dusk and will give the moisture a chance to evaporate before dark.

Avoid Draughts.

A more frequent cause of wilting, because it comes often, even when you have prepared against the sun, is from draughts of air passing over the cuttings. On a bright day you may have to open the ventilators to keep the temperature down and the wind may be blowing considerably. Not only will a gust of wind enter at the ventilators occasionally, but evaporation is rapid and you will find it difficult to keep the atmosphere in the house charged with moisture properly. Such a day is worse on a batch of carnation cuttings than any other that I know of. Wetting down the walks and under the benches helps somewhat, but only temporarily and partially.

One is tempted to spray the cuttings frequently, and it is necessary to a degree, and there is where the trouble begins. If you will spray just enough to sustain the cuttings during the ordeal and so they will dry off by night, all is well, but in your anxiety you will likely spray too late in the day and the cuttings will stand with moisture on them over night. If this occurs only at long intervals it may not result seriously if conditions are returned to normal the following day, but if it occurs repeatedly trouble will surely follow.

Rust.

Varieties that are inclined to rust will develop a case of that disease. Others will develop the common leaf-spot or fairy-ring or the common cutting bench fungus. Any of these will soon ruin a batch of cuttings and all are caused by too much moisture on the foliage. On such days as this, instead of spraying the cuttings I would suggest that you lay newspapers over them besides lowering the curtains. The curtains will keep off the draughts and the papers will arrest evaporation and if the sand is fairly moist there will be sufficient moisture under the paper to sustain the cuttings in fine condition. Remove the papers as soon as it is considered safe; too much dense shade is not good for the cuttings either.

Avoid Too Much Spraying.

We often hear it said that you should spray the cuttings every day or water them every day. Either is poor advice and should not be taken seriously. Such advice does not apply any more to cuttings in the propagating bench than it does to plants growing on the bench. You will often find several days in succession when the weather is dark and gloomy and the atmosphere is laden with moisture. You will find it necessary to run steam around and to keep the ventilators open to dry off the excessive moisture in the house. To spray cuttings on such a day would be utter folly.

Watering should be done when it is needed to keep the sand in a uniform moist condition, but it should never be watered enough to keep it in a soggy condition. Much will depend on the weather and the amount of firing required; also the grain of the sand. You may have to water every day or two sometimes, but at other times you may not need to water more than once in a week. Examine the sand in the morning and consider what kind of a day is to follow and make allowance for it. In the evening after a warm day the sand is likely to look dry on the surface, which may deceive you.

Keep Close Watch.

Look over the cuttings carefully every day and if you notice any that are badly wilted or begin to decay pick them out and destroy them. You will frequently see such a one here and there without apparent reason. If left to decay it may start cutting bench fungus and cause you all kinds of trouble. If this fungus does put in its appearance you will do well to pull out all the cuttings in its immediate vicinity. Take out the sand and sprinkle around the edges with lime and sulphur. However, if you start with good sand and keep up proper conditions it will not appear.

Spraying with formalin will help, too, but I do not advise spraying nor dusting with any of the remedies you use on the growing stock when it can be helped and never with as strong doses. Cuttings are not able to stand as strong doses as growing plants. A pinch of sulphur dropped here and there on the steam pipe under the propagating bench will help to keep the atmosphere pure, but do not overdo it, as it has a drying effect which under certain conditions would work harm.

You will find that during December, January and February, the weather is usually such that you can control conditions in the house fairly well without exposing the cuttings to high winds and drying elements, and propagating is much easier and safer than it is later in the spring. So for this reason, if for no other, you should get your cuttings into the sand during this time.

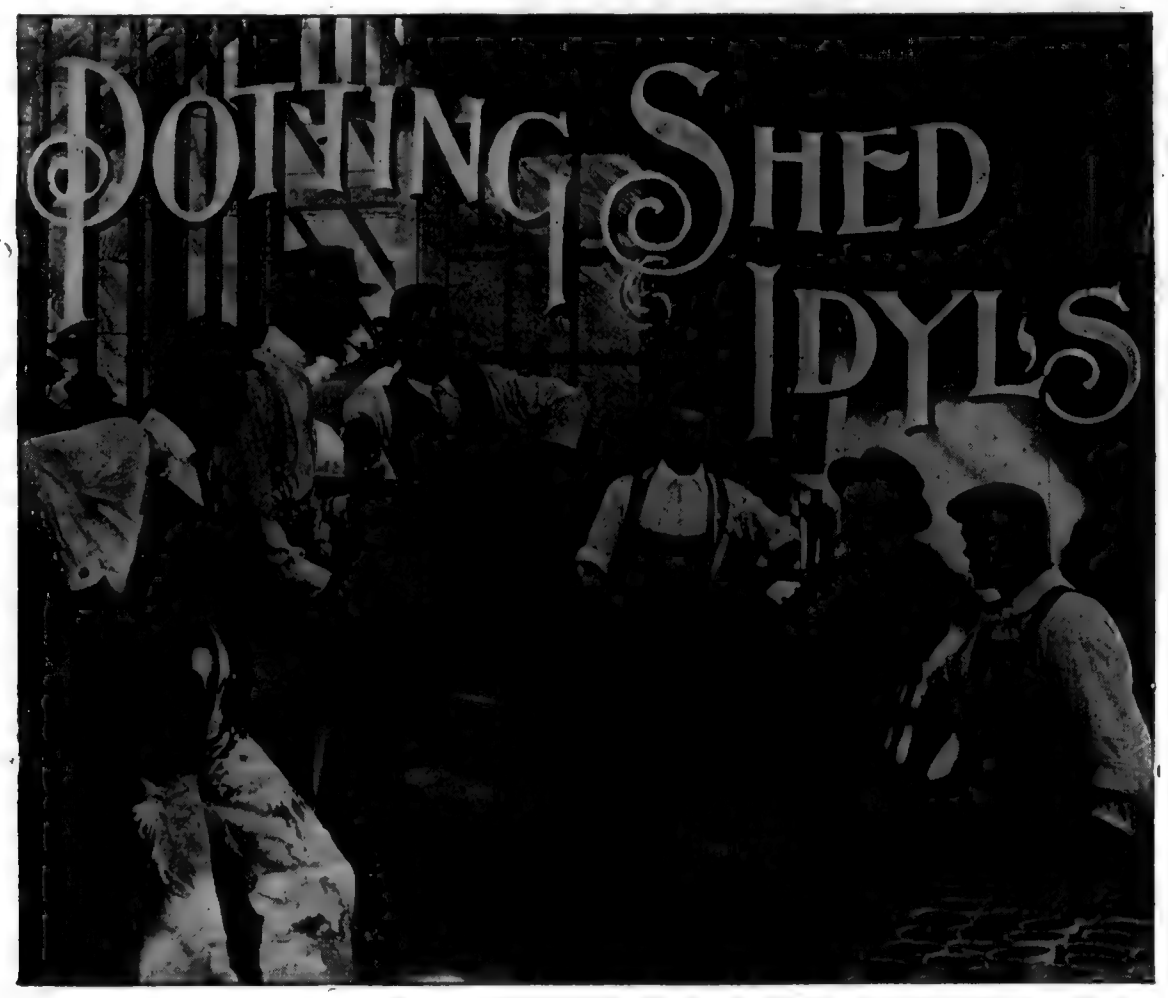
SCALE OF POINTS.

The recently organized Winter Flowering Carnation Society in England has adopted the following interesting scale of points for judging new varieties:

Color	5	Calyx	5
Size	5	General appearance	5
Fragrance	5	Stem	5
Substance	5	Habit of plant	5

A variety must gain at least thirty points to entitle it to a first-class certificate, and twenty-five points to entitle it to an award of merit.



THE GLASS MARKET.

The market for window glass is quiet in December. Production is going steadily forward, but no large stocks are yet on hand, as manufacturers cut as little of the so-called small sizes as they can. Sharp, Partridge & Co. and the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., in Chicago, who are the principal sources of supply for greenhouse glass, state that they anticipate an exceptionally heavy business next spring, early inquiries being more numerous than usual and calling for large lots. They expect a large supply to be on hand by the time actual delivery begins. They say the principal call is now for 16x20, and that buyers of this size should place orders early to be sure of getting what they want. Other sizes are more easily supplied because the demand does not run so largely to them.

In the matter of price, it appears that the strong demand, among other factors, will tend to hold the market steady. The American Window Glass Co. is perfecting its glass-blowing machine and this may have a tendency to lower prices, for, with the aid of the tariff, the blowers' wages are the principal factor in holding prices of window glass at the level they have attained in the last few years.

THE SIMPLE LIFE

As it is Led in South America.

"It does seem to me," remarked the night fireman, who had annexed the only newspaper within reach, "that these tropical hurricanes is getting too common."

"I don't know as I'd call 'em common," observed Jaggs. "Anyway, there's always somethink uncommon about 'em. I knew a chap down in the Windward Islands as was diggin' yams in his back garden when the hurricane started, and when it was over he was fishin' in twenty-six feet o' water right in the same spot."

"I suppose," remarked Tommy, "that the bottom dropped out."

"Nothink o' the sort," remarked Jaggs, "the water just blew up out o' the sea; you'd be surprised if you was to see a real windstorm. It reminds me o' that place in Kansas where I went to show 'em how to grow roses; a cyclone come along and blew the artesian well inside out."

"Jaggs," asked Tommy solemnly, "does an affidavit go with that there cyclone?"

"I must say," remarked Jaggs, ignoring the speaker, "that them West Indian storms is sometimes a bit awkward. That chap I was tellin' you about says to me as he don't mind fishin' in his own garden, but what he did object to was havin' to chase a cuttlefish out o' the kitchen when the water went down."

"That was a bit sing'lar," remarked Tommy. "But why not try kindness on the cuttlefish, instead o' chivyin' the poor beast off o' the premises?"

"Because kindness and cuttlefish don't jibe," remarked Jaggs, firmly, "though I did know a chap in the China Seas as thought he could train cuttlefish for divin' in the pearl trade."

"And what happened to him?" asked the young man from the agricultural college.

"He got into trouble with the pearl divers' union," said Jaggs, sadly, "and 'ad to turn all them cultivated cuttlefish loose after givin' 'em an edication as spoiled 'em for hanythink else. There was a chap at Hongkong as tells me a yarn about seein' a cuttlefish wearin' a bathin' suit, somewheres in the Flores Straits, and I always thought it was one o' that bunch."

Jaggs got up to fill Davy's pipe with Tommy's tobacco, and was just settling down to the enjoyment of that communistic luxury when the telephone bell rang. After a few minutes of polite monologue, in which Jaggs was heard to great advantage, he emerged from the booth, remarking:

"It's a lady as wanted a broken wreath, somethink choice, with a discount because she's goin' to give us a big decoratin' order, but I gave her the notion of havin' a piller instead. There's a whole bunch o' them callas will be gettin' whiskers if we don't use 'em up pretty soon."

"I never see a chap like you for changin' people's minds," remarked Tommy, appreciatively. "I believe, if you 'ad 'arf a chance, you'd sell a gates ajar to a chap as wanted a weddin' bouquet!"

"It takes talent to handle a retail trade," remarked Jaggs, modestly. "Some chaps never seems to have any savvy in that line. There was that chap from the Royal Botanic, as I met when I was shipwrecked up in the Andes—"

"Ah," remarked Tommy, who was carving weird figures on a home-made briar pipe, "I did hear a chap say as most o' your 'orrible shipwrecks took place on dry land."

"Not all of 'em," remarked Jaggs, indignantly, "there wasn't much dry land about that wreck in the South Seas when me and another chap 'ad to live on rain-water and boot-tops for ten days before we was picked up. But when you get mixed up in a Pacific gale with an earthquake and tidal wave on the side, there's liable to be somethink doin'."

"I never was stuck on them tramp steamers along the Pacific coast," began Jaggs. "They was always full o' cockroaches for one thing—most as big as rats, too—and about the only way a chap could get away from 'em was to fall overboard. Then the crew was always gettin' mixed up in some dinky little sawed-off revolution, and about the first thing as 'appened after I went aboard the captain laid out the mate. It was a messy sort of a murder, too, and I told him that if he killed another man in my bunk I'd turn in and do a little pacifyin' myself. The crew didn't like it neither and somehow the captain went overboard the next night. I thought askin' questions might be a bit awkward, and it wasn't my funeral anyways, so I just says as how the decks gets slippery these dark nights, and lets it go at that."

"But where it's a question of murder," began the night fireman, who was suspected of joining a civic improvement association.

"Well," remarked Jaggs, easily, "there was the mate to begin with, you see, and even a chap as didn't make a specialty of 'orrid murders might slip overboard of a dark night. Still, there we was, short-'anded, not a chap on board as knew a sextant from a hole in the ground, alone on the ragin' Pacific."

There was an impressive pause, while Jaggs puffed vigorously at his pipe; even the greenhouse terrier showed symptoms of interest.

"I didn't pay much attention to the storm at first," continued Jaggs. "I was too busy dodgin' cockroaches and makin' myself solid with the crew. The first time I was fired out o' my bunk, I thinks it was just a gentle hint from some one as it was time to get up, but the next time, when I come to I was walkin' on the ceilin' like a fly, with everythink loose piled on top o' me. There wasn't nothink a chap could do except lay low, and sit tight, so I crawled into my bunk the next time it come around and reckoned I was goin' to drown comfortable, anyway. Last thing I notice before I go to sleep the old tub seemed to be actin' just like a fat man steppin' on a banana peel; it had shootin' the chutes faded out o' sight.

"Well, I don't know how long I was asleep, but when I waked up everythink was calm and peaceful, no jar from the screw nor nothink, and if I 'adn't known it couldn't be, I could swear as I heard birds twitterin' outside. I looked out o' the port-hole, and all I could see was a chap ridin' a mule, seemed like a mile or so away."

"I s'pose you'd run ashore over night," suggested Tommy, with a yawn.

"Well, in a manner o' speakin'" said Jaggs. "But when I went on deck there wasn't nothink to be seen but mountains and rocks, and a few hard-lookin' citizens with striped awnin's over their shoulders, that acted like we was trespassin'. There wasn't no ocean in sight and I began to think I was just a plain candidate for the foolish house."

"It sounds probable, don't it?" remarked the fireman.

"No, Johnson, it don't," responded Jaggs, firmly. "If I was tryin' to 'and you chaps a lemon, all I'd 'ave to do would be to tell a yarn as sounded probable. That's easy; any chump can do it. But there's lots of things that ain't probable happenin' every day, and this was one of 'em. Come to find out, there'd been a bloomin' tidal wave along of an earthquake; most o' the real estate along the coast dropped out o' sight, and a lot o' the ocean was chucked up in the mountains, with us on top, like a bunch o' tourists seein' South America. I never hear anythink so scandalous as the way the crew took on about it; seemed to think I was a reg'lar Jonah. They was an ungrateful set; I told 'em they'd got an elegant stand for a summer hotel, but after two of 'em laid for me with carvin' knives, and another tried to swat me with the binnacle lamp, I thought I'd better skiddoo.''

''But how did they get the steamer afloat again?'' asked the fireman, doubtfully.

''They didn't,'' responded Jaggs, ''she was nine miles inland, and there she stuck; last I hear about it they was usin' her for a jail. They wouldn't have no difficulty about fillin' the jail, neither, if I 'ad anythink to say about it.''

Jaggs got up with a yawn to look at the thermometer, and invited the terrier to take a run down the big rose house, while he put on a crack more air. The night fireman looked irritated, as Jaggs strolled back again and filled another pipe in a leisurely manner.

''I always did say,'' he remarked, with a defiant look at Davy, ''as too much nitrate aint good for 'mums—makes 'em bilious. It's like old-fashioned Perle roses — them bull-headed buds—''

''But what happened next?'' broke in the injured fireman.

''Well, blessed if I 'adn't clean forgot,'' said Jaggs, with an air of surprise. ''What was it I was talkin' about—that there jaguar as mistook me for his breakfast, or the cavern I slid into where them Peruvian Incas was buried? I can tell you, when I lit a match and see all them bloomin' mummies grinnin' at me, I think orchid collectin' ain't near as frivolous as runnin' the city morgue.''

''Ain't you a bit mixed in your dates, old chap?'' asked Tommy anxiously. ''Last chapter you was shipwrecked atop o' Mount Ararat, or thereabouts.''

''And o' course you think nothink couldn't 'appen to a chap arterwards,'' complained Jaggs, pettishly. ''The trouble with you chaps is that you won't stand for havin' your minds improved. You know there ain't anythink in Nicholson's Dictionary as can hold a candle to James Algernon Jaggs.''

''But what about the mummies?'' asked the potting-shed chorus.

''I reckon them mummies will keep till tomorrow night,'' said Jaggs, severely, and a moment later the night man was alone, except for the society of the greenhouse terrier.

HOLIDAY ADVERTISING.

For the retail florist who does business in a city of moderate size the advertising proposition is a simple one. He caters to the trade of practically the whole community and by inserting a modest advertisement in the best paper of his town he can reach practically all his trade and he does not waste his money through the payment for a circulation far beyond his clientele.

For a retail florist in one of the big cities it is a different proposition from the fact that only such stores as are centrally located can hope to draw trade from all parts of the city. C. A. Samuelson, in Chicago, is located two miles from the center of town and naturally draws the bulk of his patronage from the people who live within a reasonable distance of his store. As he keeps a distinctly first-class place, only the better class of trade is appealed to. Nevertheless, Mr. Samuelson finds it worth while to do a certain amount of regular advertising in the daily papers. As with all others, he finds it especially worth while to advertise at the holidays. There is much value in the suggestion offered to the public that flowers are the most acceptable of remembrances, whether it be at Christmas or St. Valentine's day.

The illustration herewith is a reproduction of four of Mr. Samuelson's holiday advertisements, beginning with last Christmas and running through to Easter. These were published the Sunday preceding each holiday in the Tribune and the Record-Herald. The space would be equal to a quarter of a page in the REVIEW and the charge in the Tribune was $42.50, in the Record-Herald $32.50. Mr. Samuelson paid the Tribune ten per cent extra for locating his advertisement on the society page. He estimates that each of these advertisements was placed in the hands of 500,000 readers and that if they were actually read through by only 100,000 people the general effect must be worth the money. He finds it difficult to estimate the immediate returns because he does not care to quote ''bargains'' or prices, but that they are doing the work is shown by the fact that he has received many orders by mail from out-of-town people who wished remembrances delivered to friends in Chicago. Usually such orders come through the local florists and are filled by a correspondent at the point of delivery. No matter where you are asked to deliver stock, you can find on the Review's pages for "Leading Retail Florists" some one located close to that place and equipped to handle your order satisfactorily.

GERANIUMS FOR WINTER.

After chrysanthemums are gone and before Dutch bulbous stock, cyclamens, primulas and other late winter or early spring flowering plants are well in season, there is a decided lack of blooming stock for conservatory, window or other decorative purposes. Poinsettias are brilliant, but too often lanky and easily become leafless. Lorraine begonias are, of course, available, but there is too much of a sameness year after year and something out of the beaten track always is welcome.

Winter-flowering Geranium Emile Zola.

From the end of November until the middle of February the zonal section of geraniums, or to be more correct, pelargoniums, are without a superior for brilliancy, variety and persistency in flowering, and the wonder is that so few commercial growers and private gardeners give them even a fractional part of the attention they merit.

Geraniums for winter flowering need special treatment, like any other plant. Because they are a common, easily grown and bloomed plant, one which will stand with impunity an occasional drying up at the root without dying, it is not to be expected that slipshod cultural methods will give gratifying returns. From cuttings rooted in the regulation manner in February excellent plants in 6-inch or even larger pots can be had the following winter. Pots six inches in diameter are a convenient size to handle and splendid plants can be produced in them.

The average commercial grower has a special hankering after double or semidouble varieties. These, however, are not to be compared with the finer single sorts, especially the French and English round-flowered section. Not one customer in ten would select doubles from a mixed batch, the singles are so much more beautiful and refined. The usual interrogatory, "Will they ship well?" we would answer by stating that they carry fully as well as Lorraine begonias and better than Primula Sinensis and without the use of any floral gum to hold the petals together. We think any grower within convenient access, say twenty to twenty-five miles of a market, can deliver them to retailers in good condition by rail. Of course, care in handling is necessary, but we have found them to carry that distance quite satisfactorily.

Plants for winter blooming should be grown under glass all the time. Many of the best singles resent open-air culture. Especially is this true of the English round flowered section. Successive shifts from 2½-inch to 4-inch, 6-inch, and, if needed, 8-inch pots should be given. For the final shift a compost of two-thirds turfy loam and one-third old, dried cow manure with a dash of Clay's fertilizer and soot is suitable. Ram the soil firm at the final shift and drain efficiently.

Pinching the shoots to secure bushy plants may be done until the end of September. All flower trusses should be removed until the middle of October. Feeding with liquid manure and soot water weekly, or a surfacing of Clay's fertilizer once in two weeks when the pots are well filled with roots, is very helpful. Bonora we have found very good, but it must be used sparingly; otherwise it promotes too rank a growth. A light house with a night temperature of 50 to 52 degrees suits the plants to a nicety while in flower and the atmosphere should be tolerably dry at all times. If fumigation is done, use something other than tobacco stems.

Some of the best single varieties we have grown are the following:

Crimsons and scarlets—Jacquerie, Paul Crampel, The Sirdar, Radium, Eugene Sue, Hall Caine and Telegraph.

Whites—Albion, Snowdrop.

Pinks—Gertrude Pearson, Anna Defeuillet, J. M. Barry (this is the largest-flowered of the whole section, individual flowers are two and one-half to three inches across), Juste Oliver, Softness.

Various other shades — Richmond Beauty, scarlet, white feathers on upper petals; Emile Zola, a magnificent salmon orange; Mousseline and Ian McLaren.

As Christmas plants Richmond Beauty, Jacquerie, Paul Crampel, The Sirdar and Hall Caine are among the best sorts to grow.

Evenden Bros. have recently added to their already extensive plant, five ridge and furrow houses of truss construction, for growing carnations and tomatoes, the three center houses being twenty feet wide and the two outside, twenty-five feet, each house 178 feet long. This is one of a number of good-sized ranges of the Lord & Burnham new truss construction. The sashbars are 1⅛x2¼, instead of 1⅜x2½ as in their standard sashbar construction. The new V-shaped gutter is employed, greatly reducing the shade. It is equipped with a "U" drip gutter. All screws and bolts are countersunk, so there are no points for condensation. The gutters are supported by 2-inch pipes set in adjustable cast-iron footpieces bedded in concrete two feet six inches in the ground. Through every second pipe support the water is led off from the gutters to tile drains.

The ventilation is continuous on one side of each house. The main rod that goes across the house is not carried directly from eave to eave, but extends from the eave up into the truss and then across, and so holds the roof that it can neither go up nor down. The truss rods are strong enough to carry much more than the weight of the roof.

Current Comment.

Business during the last week has been good. All stock has been kept cleaned up, and now that mums are out of the way the demand has increased for roses and carnations. Several decorations and funerals kept the retailers busy.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Society it was decided to hold a show in connection with the annual meeting in January, at which time the society will award certificates to anything of merit. Those having anything of this kind are requested to make an exhibit. The meeting will be held at the Commercial club on January 8 at 2:30 p. m., after which a supper will be served. All state members are invited, also any from other states who can attend.

Ernest Hukriede, aged seventy-one, died suddenly December 5. Heart failure was the cause. He was born in Germany and came to this city in 1868. He is survived by a brother and his son Fred. The news of his death came as a shock to his many friends. The business will be carried on by his son.

Herman Schilling is confined to the house, the result of an operation. His many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

Frank Harritt will move at once to his new place, Willowmere, southeast of the city. S.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

J. M. Ward & Co., of Peabody, Mass., have remodeled and enlarged their store. It is finished in Carolina pine, giving a pleasing effect. Two houses have been added for flowering plants. Poinsettias are much in evidence for Christmas.

At Salem, Mass., McGee, Geary & Co. had a close call when the opera house adjoining their plant burned recently. By good luck and careful watching the plant escaped with a scorching. Business has been good, the run of funeral orders unusually heavy.

Owing to the value of the land for building purposes M. Miller & Sons expect to tear down their houses at Lynn, Mass., and build a showhouse with office on the site. It is rumored that James Miller expects to install a side partner in one of his new dwelling houses. He was one of the regulars at Dayton and says he never yet attended a national convention without getting some good. He is city forester and is preparing to make war on the gypsy moth.

The William Bock place, at Cambridge, Mass., was sold at auction last week by N. F. McCarthy. The houses went to W. C. Stickle & Co. and John McKenzie. Mr. McKenzie already has two places and is running them successfully, growing both for the wholesale and retail trade.

Fred C. Becker, of Cambridge, Mass., says prospects for a big holiday trade were never brighter and has made preparations accordingly.

Dan Murphy, W. E. Doyle's lieutenant at Cambridge, Mass., is justly elated over the largest batch of orders on record for the holidays. Flowering and highly-colored foliage plants will be in good demand. Mr. Doyle thinks we are even yet in the primary stage of the business.

Thomas Roland, of Nahant, Lynn, Mass., has a fine batch of single-flowered zonal geraniums that will be a novelty and doubtless will prove good sellers. Mr. Roland is to the front with a supply of Gloire de Lorraine and ardisias. I learn that the supply of this stock, also oranges, is practically taken up.

M. B. Bunker, of Boston, Mass., who was the first to introduce boxwood in design work in the bean city, through S. S. Pennock, fears the supply will soon be exhausted. I noted a handsome wreath being shipped out of town. One-half was composed of Richmond roses, the other lily of the valley on a groundwork of galax.

T. F. Galvin, of Boston, is one of the few who keep up a window display of orchids correctly labeled. I noticed in the crowd with what interest the labels were read and commented upon.

F. E. Palmer, of Brookline, Mass., says that since his essay was published he has harder work than ever to live up to the standard set therein and says it acts as a stimulus to go one better. His automobile is a dandy.

Jas. E. Quinn, the veteran craftsman of Brookline, has handed the active part of his snug business over to his son, Stephen, who has been interested many years.

Quinn Bros., of Brookline, have two stores, finding another location desirable in addition to the old stand. They speak highly of the new hybrid tea rose, Jules Grolez, described as a pink Kaiserin, a valuable addition to our list of summer roses, being superior to Maman Cochet.

Mrs. C. E. Mansfield reports business good at Fitchburg, Mass. During eight years of close attention there has been an increasing demand for choice stock, part of which is grown at her own greenhouses. W. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

As long as we will be enjoying such a mild winter the demand for flowers will not be large. Our late chrysanthemums and our roses are now at their best. No greenhouse stock, from wherever it may come, can be compared with our outdoor plants, which now are perfect. At the city park the head gardener, F. Broker, deserves credit for the way he grows pansies. It is a general belief among florists here that the first pansies sown in August do not give much satisfaction. Much money is sent north for our first supply. The variety of annuals now in the park reflects much credit on Mr. Broker.

At Audubon park they are contemplating several improvements. Taking advantage of a considerable depression existing in the center, they hope to have a waterway through the park. Although it will take a considerable amount of money, the commissioner is to take under consideration the specifications which are now being calculated by Superintendent Jules Fonta.

Society Meeting.

Joseph Steckler, in the name of the Society of Southern Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists, called a meeting of the members who assembled December 6, at 125 St. Charles street. It had been decided previously that around the Mardi Gras is the best time for a general meeting. The railroad fares are reduced at this time and the attractions of the festivities are that much more of an inducement. The convention will last three days, Thursday, Friday and Saturday following the Mardi Gras. All the details of the reunion will be discussed and arranged in the best possible manner and the matter was put in the hands of several committees.

Chairman Lagerbie, with the help of W. Eichling, vice-president of the society, and acting in the absence of President P. J. Berckmans, appointed the different committees, as follows: Committee on exhibits, E. Baker, chairman; P. Chopin, James Newsham, H. Papworth and Paul Abele. Committee on ways and means, Jos. Steckler, chairman; W. Eichling, H. Papworth. Committee on reception, M. M. de Lapouyade, chairman; J. St. Mard, W. B. Wichers, R. Eichling, H. A. Despommier, H. A. Despommier, Jr., J. Menard, Jos. Schindler, F. Ziegler, U. J. Virgin, R. Steckler, M. Cook, Jr., and R. Ory. Committee on badge, R. Ratel.

There will be an exhibition of flowers and plants and everything points to a big success right at the start. The membership is already in the fifties strong, and no doubt after the first meeting that number will be largely increased. This is not a question of interference with the field of any other established society. We appeal to all florists of the Union and invite them to come down south with the same spirit as they go north from all parts of the United States. We will do all we can to receive them well.

Various Notes.

Joseph J. Goudy, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, has been in town for a few days.

H. A. Despommier has returned to his old position on the I. C. R. R., taking charge of the station gardens between Canton and Memphis.

H. A. Despommier, Jr., is now gardener to W. Bluer, the old Hutchinson place, one of the brightest gardens of St. Charles avenue.

Emile Valdejo is again in New Orleans.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The week has given us a succession of cold waves, with some snow and warm spells sandwiched between them. The production of flowers has been materially lessened and, on the other hand, the cold has checked buying. Prices have kept up well and about everything has cleared out.

Roses are none too plentiful and prices show a hardening tendency. Better grades of Liberty and Richmond bring $3 and $4 per dozen. Bride, Maid, Chatenay, Killarney and Wellesley also sell well, making up to $2 a dozen.

Carnations sell satisfactorily, whites moving more slowly than colored sorts. Enchantress is of grand quality and is still the most largely grown and popular variety. In whites The Queen is much in evidence. Some splendid White perfection come from one or two growers.

Violets keep up to the dollar mark most of the time, and will not drop for a few weeks. Quite a few chrysanthemums are still seen, mostly small blooms. A good supply of Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths are coming in. Lilium Harrisii and callas are quite scarce. Some nice mignonettes and bouvardia are coming in. A fair supply of Cattleya Trianæ and C. Percivaliana. Green stock is selling well at same prices as in previous weeks.

At Brighton.

A recent call on William H. Elliott, of Brighton, found everything on that skilful rosarian's place in excellent condition. Some splendid long benches of Bride and Bridesmaid were in the pink of perfection for Christmas. The houses of Kaiserin and Carnot were still giving nice flowers, but will now be rested. Another season Carnot may be dropped, as its color is not sufficiently good for a pink rose. Miss Kate Moulton, Tom Field and Maman Cochet were all tried as summer bloomers. The first named did very well and will be grown again next season.

A fine lot of Liberty in several special houses were right for the holidays. These were carrying excellent stems for this variety, but it cannot compare with Richmond as grown by Mr. Elliott at his Madbury, N. H., establishment, where he has 12,000 of the last named growing. Mr. Elliott considers Liberty a better spring and summer rose, but Richmond outclasses it the rest of the year and will probably entirely displace Liberty next season. At Madbury, Killarney and Wellesley are grown in quantity, in addition to Richmond.

Several houses are devoted to Asparagus Sprengeri, and of course Asparagus plumosus nanus is still a great specialty here. In spite of the large quantity grown it is difficult to keep up with orders. For fuel a mixture of one-third Georges Creek Cumberland coal and two-thirds Buckwheat hard coal screenings is found economical and satisfactory.

Horticultural Society.

The directors of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society had a lengthy session December 8. It was unanimously voted to offer the Gardeners' and Florists' Club free use of a hall, light and janitor service, for forty meetings of the landscape gardening class the club has organized. The Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture was invited to hold its annual sessions at Horticultural hall the first week in December, 1907.

The following among other committees were appointed for 1907: Plants and flowers, A. H. Fewkes chairman, Robert Cameron, W. N. Craig, T. D. Hatfield and William Nicholson. Fruits, Wilfrid Wheeler chairman, Charles F. Curtis, J. Willard Hill. Vegetables, Isaac Locke chairman, J. B. Shurtleff and Duncan Finlayson. Children's gardens, H. S. Adams chairman, W. P. Rich, W. E. C. Rich and C. W. Jenks.

Various Notes.

Mellor & Saunders, of Lowell, retail florists, failed last week. Quite a few growers were hit by the failure.

Peirce Bros. had the misfortune to have a house of pink chrysanthemums frozen during the cold wave last week, owing to a night fireman falling asleep.

Hugh Grant, for some years with the late Denys Zirngiebel and other well-known growers, and lately at Biddeford, Me., is in a Boston hospital suffering from a paralytic shock.

A. Roper, of Tewksbury, has some splendid seedling carnations. A variegated sort with a strong stem, excellent calyx and immense flower will prove a winner.

E. J. Crowley, of Newtonville Greenhouses, is on the sick list.

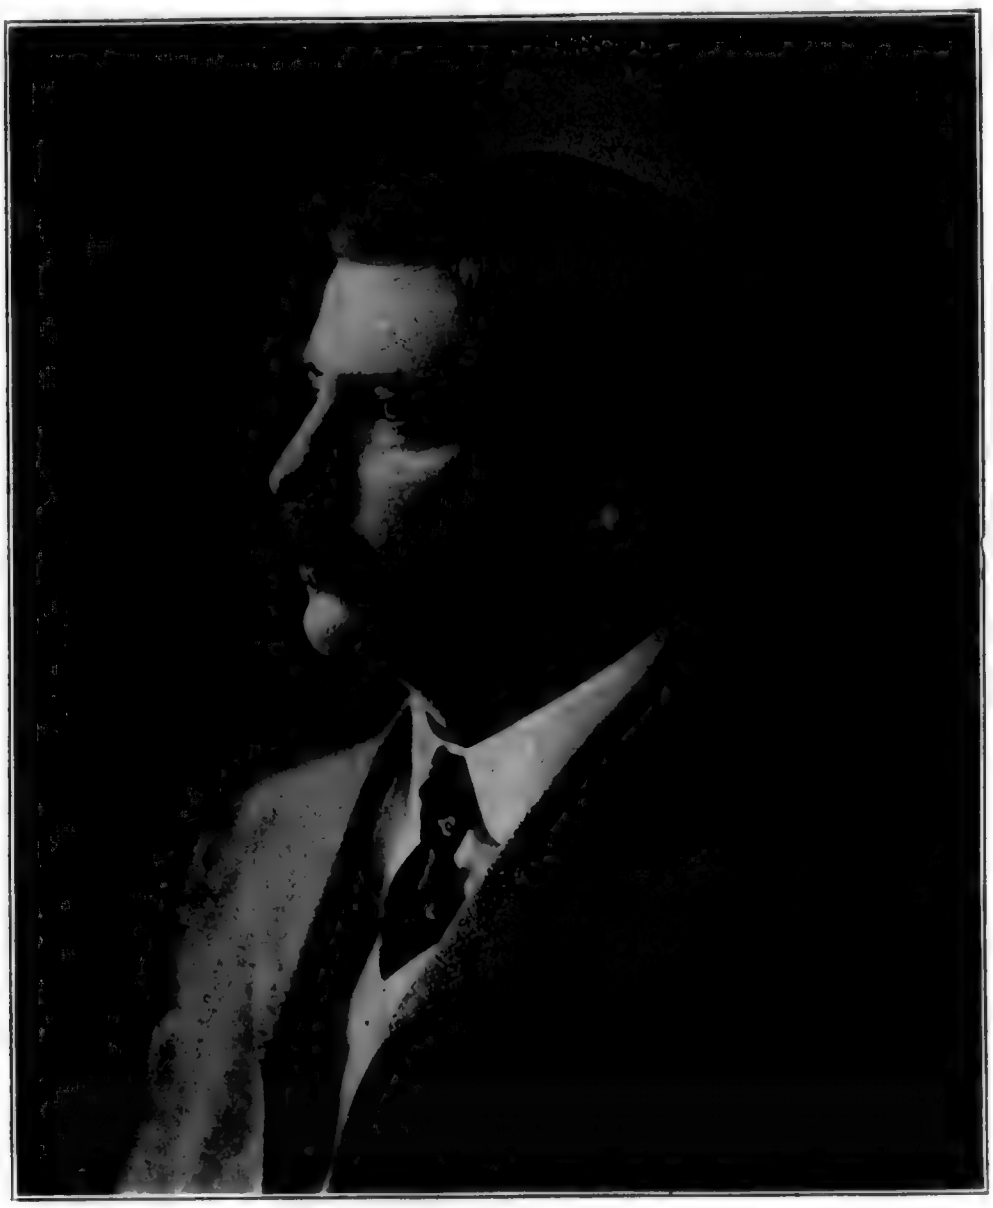
We regret to report that Mrs. E. O. Orpet, of South Lancaster, is seriously ill at the Clinton hospital, where she has undergone a critical operation. We hope for her speedy convalescence.

F. J. Dolansky, of Lynn, is marketing some fine poinsettias, cyclamens and primulas which meet with a ready sale.

H. A. Stevens Co., of Dedham, has several splendid houses of carnations. Their pale pink Lawson sport does well. A seedling of the same color as Enchantress promises to beat even that fine variety.

There will again be a big attendance at the last meeting of the year of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on December 18. In addition to W. H. Wyman's lecture on "Craft and the Craftsman" there will be much other business of interest.

Welch Bros. are carrying a specially fine stock of holly and other greenery for the holidays. They have very small surpluses of cut flowers at present.



A. A. Reed, of Whitman, is cutting a fine lot of seasonable orchids. Mr. Reed is a successful cultivator of these plants.

The Seed Trade Bowling League is this season composed of teams from Schlegel & Fottler Co., R. & J. Farquhar & Co., J. Breck & Sons, H. E. Fiske Co., F. W. Emerson & Co., and Park Street Market. The teams are having a keen tussle for supremacy. On December 6 Farquhar & Co. won three straight games from the Emerson Co., Schlegel & Fottler Co. after tying the Park Street Market, won the roll off, and then won the next two games.

Walter Mott, of Bobbink & Atkins, was one of the visitors last week, making his initial New England trip.

Charles H. Totty.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

Charles H. Totty, who was elected president of the New York Florists' Club December 10, is a resident of Madison, N. J., but is an active participant in all the trade affairs in the metropolis; indeed, Madison is counted as floriculturally a part of New York City, for it is the great rose-growing center for that market. This is a young man's age, and Mr. Totty is only 33 years old, having been born in Shropshire, England, in 1873. Although none of his family ever was connected with our trade, his chief delight, even as a boy, was work in the garden. That early love never has left him and he says that no matter what good fortune the future may have in store, he expects to end his days as he began them, growing flowers.

At the age of 13 years, having absorbed a good part of the education afforded by the common schools of Shropshire, the lad went to work in the gardens of a Mr. Sheringham, where he stayed three years, in accordance with the recognized apprenticeship system. Then a year in the nurseries of Messrs. Dickson, of Chester, was supposed to provide sufficient horticultural knowledge to launch him as a full-fledged journeyman gardener. After a year at Norris Green, a noted fruit-growing establishment near Liverpool, he came to America in 1893. A year and a half was spent on the estate of Mrs. Thompson, at Canandaigua, N. Y., after which the young man located at Madison, having found employment on the H. McKay Twombly estate, under the superintendency of Arthur Herrington, to whose precept he owes much for the direction given his thoughts and desires. He stayed here eight years and became as thorough a grower as ever graduated from that school of good gardening. He left to go into business for himself as a wholesale cut flower and plant grower and bought the James Hart greenhouses at Madison, which he since has remodeled, enlarged and made one of the noted places of the town.

While Mr. Totty was acquiring an all-round knowledge of the business, he specialized on chrysanthemums, and, while from his place now come some of the best roses and other stock reaching the New York market, still it is for his success with chrysanthemums that he is most widely known. Almost from the start of his business he has made a feature of the trial of all new sorts and the dissemination of such novelties as he approved. The sorts sent out number scores. He has handled in America the Wells-Pockett sets of recent years, as well as many good American sorts. For a number of years Mr. Totty has contributed Chrysanthemum Notes to the columns of the REVIEW, certainly the most widely read notes on this flower which have appeared in America and probably in any other country, for skilled growers everywhere recognize that they are among the most important contributions in the whole history of the somewhat voluminous literature of the chrysanthemum.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

We have had a great deal of cloudy weather in the last week and only fair business can be reported. Work for weddings, receptions, dinners and other social occasions was quiet all the week. A fairly good over-the-counter trade is reported by the downtown florists, also a few good funeral orders. Not much of importance will take place until a week before Christmas. The store men are busy making up roping and holly wreaths for Christmas.

In looking over the stock that comes in at the wholesale houses we find that roses are in good supply. Fancy stock is generally cleaned up at once, as it is limited. Prices on this stock have come down a little since Thanksgiving.

Carnations clean up pretty well each morning, as they are by no means plentiful. Lawson is beginning to look better. Enchantress is fine and so is Nelson Fisher. White Perfection is the best white and Craig the best red. The latter is scarce. Prices on these are high.

California violets are coming in heavily, and with cool, clear weather should be abundant for the holidays. Doubles are scarce in this market. Bulbous stock is moving satisfactorily. Romans are now in good supply, also Paper Whites, with good demand. Lily of the valley dragged last week. Stock is all of good quality. Greens are plentiful, with good demand.

Various Notes.

J. W. Ross, of Centralia, Ill., was a visitor last week. Mr. Ross reports good trade and has a fine cut of everything in season from his 22,000 feet of glass.

Frank J. Fillmore, for many years in business on Nebraska avenue, has advertised his place for sale. He wants to get a place out in the country and grow for the market.

Charles Wors, Jr., is now in the employ of George Angermueller. Mr. Wors, senior, was all smiles last week. He says it's a girl and his seven sons have a sister.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, spent a day in the city last week, visiting growers and buying supplies. Mr. Guy reports business good in Belleville.

Charlie Connon has given up his flower stand in the Grand Leader department store. He is now with the Michel Plant and Bulb Co. on Maryland avenue.

Charlie Kuehn is having a big run on supplies for the holidays. The wire department is working full force.

Gus Eggeling reports a fine trade at both of his places Thanksgiving day and since.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill., reports that he will be unable to attend the local club meeting this week, Thursday, as he will attend the meeting of the Bloomington (Ill.) Florists' Club.

Ostertag Bros.' big force was kept busy all of the week with decorative work and large funeral designs.

A. Jablonsky, at Wellston, has nearly sold out on blooming plants for Christmas. His Gloire de Lorraine begonias are finer than ever this year. His place at Central, in the country, is producing so far this season an extra fine cut of roses and carnations.

The Bentzen Commission Co. is in the market with an extra fine quality of holly, mistletoe and other Christmas greens.

Philip Gobel, at the head of Reservoir park, reports that the city has started a nursery at the Chain of Rock, stock to be used for the new King's Highway boulevard. W. E. Robinson, the head of both of these city parks, is having a lot of extra work done for next spring.

Subscriptions to the big guarantee fund for the flower show are coming in fast, and by the first of the year one-half of the $10,000 will be subscribed. Frank Weber, chairman of the committee, will return early next week, and then the committee will take up a personal canvass of those who have failed to respond. To date one-quarter of the fund has been subscribed.

The florist bowlers had a fine time at the new DeSoto alleys on last Monday night. Capt. Lohrenz had ten men out and some good scores were made. George Schreifer was high man of the night. Some of the west end florists bowl every Monday night at the Hamilton hotel.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

A whirl through the retail shops of this city will convince anyone that trade is good all around and that our people are keeping strictly up with the times, which means much. Not many years ago all a cut flower store needed was an ice-box and a counter, but now note the change. Our shops are really art rooms and each one tries to excel the other in artistic blending of color and arrangement, and at this season the collection of specimen plants you will find in every store makes it worth a trip around, not to mention the beautiful pottery, both antique and modern, all arranged with plants to the best of advantage. These, with the Christmas novelties of all kinds, make the stores beautiful and of interest, even to one who sees them every day.

There have been many decorations in the last week, requiring large flowers, and the late chrysanthemums have come in most usefully and brought much better prices than earlier in the season. Many of these decorations have been for debutantes, but this week will clean up all that are on the calendar at present and other affairs will take their places.

The wholesale houses were quite busy. Stock of most kinds was scarce and it kept them busy to keep every one in a good humor without giving them exactly what they wanted. Saturday night saw most of them cleaned up nicely.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club met Tuesday night with a large attendance and some fine exhibits of plants, such as begonias, primulas, cyclamens, poinsettias, palms and a general assortment of such plants as are desirable for the holidays. Several of those appointed to talk were away, leaving only Charles Crall and W. A. Clarke of those appointed. While they did not say a great deal, they said enough to start the others, so there were some pertinent questions asked and answered. It was remarked by several that the club is very much alive and that every meeting gives the members something to think and talk about. While some of the remarks are not complimentary, they are made with good intent, and only for the good of the boys. One thing which was forcibly brought to their attention was that there is an opening for a man to grow palms, ferns and blooming plants in this vicinity. The next meeting will be a smoker and a good committee has it in charge. They will try to let you know more of it later.

Fred Burki and T. P. Langhans have been doing the east most of the last week, presumably looking up good things for another season.

Theo. F. Imback, of Morgantown, W. Va., was in the city a couple of days looking after business.

L. L. Lamborn spent a day at Bakerstown, visiting the Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co., and one day about Pittsburg. Mr. Lamborn is a large grower from Alliance, O.

E. M. Hall, of Fairmont, W. Va., was also looking up holiday goods last week.

Hoo-Hoo.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business remains about the same. Preparations for Christmas are seen on all sides. Mums are practically gone. Roses and carnations are scarce. Evidently the pickling of the latter has already begun. Valley, Romans, narcissi, etc., are selling readily; in fact, any half-way good flower is soon disposed of at a good figure.

There seems to be a scarcity of azaleas for the holidays. Poinsettias are plentiful.

Club Meeting.

The weather was anything but favorable on the Detroit Florists' Club's last meeting night, but the attendance was fair. Robert Rahaley acted as secretary. J. F. Sullivan was laid up with a cold. Leopold Mallest, of Mount Clemens, was elected a member. The names of Frank DeBeul and Mr. Tossey, both employed on Belle Isle park, were proposed. A discussion on red-spider brought out the opinion that there is no way of killing this pest, the different insecticides being merely preventives if applied in time. A question as to what mums pay best brought out the retailers' view that too many yellow and mid-season varieties are grown. About one-half white, one-fourth pink and one-fourth yellow is about right. In this locality the medium-priced varieties sell best. Wm. Brown ventured the opinion that even though the fancy kinds do not meet with a ready sale, it is essential that some be displayed about the store.

John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., sent a vase of Imperial and Pink Imperial carnations. Pink Imperial is a fine variety. The stem is long and strong, but apparently not as brittle as the Lawson stem. Calyx and shape of flower are fine. Color is a pleasing pink, about Lawson shade.

The program called for a display of Christmas novelties, but owing to the disagreeable weather only two exhibits were staged. George Rackham showed some fine cyclamens and Fred Miesel made a nice display, including fine Jerusalem cherries, primroses, salvias in bloom in pots, and exceptionally fine cyclamens.

Robert Flowerday was to have read an essay on "Christmas Twenty Years Ago and Today" at the next meeting, but it was deemed advisable to put this off until after Christmas.

Various Notes.

Thos. Magee, of Davis & Magee, Toledo, O., bought considerable stock in this city for Thanksgiving.

Mrs. Allan P. Cox reports a steady increase in business and is well satisfied. Mrs. Cox only recently embarked in the trade.

Thos. Browne, of Greenfield, entertained a number of the boys at an annual feast and card party the afternoon and evening of December 7.

Almost any evening you will find a dainty supper being prepared by one of the young ladies in Taepke's store. "We prefer getting our own meals," says Miss Amanda; and they do it right.

A floral department has been opened in Harvey's drug store, at Woodward avenue and High street. The bulk of the stock comes from A. Harvey's greenhouses in Orion, Mich.

H. S.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business has not been rushing, still the wholesale houses are selling out close every day. The demand is just about equal to the supply. Roses are still in heaviest supply, but with the mum out of the market they are selling so much better that there is not the oversupply that we have been having all fall. They are being sold right up to quoted prices. Carnations continue about as last reported. There are none too many of them and they sell out clean every day. Violets are having a good run and more could be sold to good advantage. Singles are especially in demand and bring the highest prices. Few mums are to be seen now, but there is scarcely any call for them.

Everyone is busily engaged in making preparations for the holiday rush. That flowers will be scarce at that time goes almost without saying. We are now having dark, cloudy weather, when we ought to be having some bright sunshine. From the present prospects carnations will be only in fair supply. Roses ought to be more plentiful than any other flower.

Christmas decorating greens are now on the market in large quantities and the demand for them will be fully up to previous years. There is some report that good holly will be scarce, but I believe that there will be plenty to go around, though the price may average a little higher than in other years. This will be a good thing. Bouquet green will be scarce.

Society Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society was held December 8. After the usual business was transacted the members engaged in a social discussion of many interesting topics. It was decided to open a question box, and any member who is desirous of gaining information on any subject can, by sending the question to either the president or secretary of the society, have the same answered by an expert at the January meeting. If it proves to be successful, the question box will be made a permanent feature of every meeting. The next meeting of the society, which will be held January 12, will be devoted especially to social features. There will be a smoker and several speakers of considerable reputation will be present to entertain the members on various topics. It is intended to make this meeting the banner one of the year, and, with all the good things that will be served up, there ought to be a big turn-out of the members.

C. J. Ohmer.

Sibley, Ia.—A. R. Redshow will erect a greenhouse plant here early in the spring.

West Grove, Pa.—The firm of Green & Baylis is a new partnership formed December 1, 1906. They have 15,000 feet of glass and will make chrysanthemums a specialty.

A. T. Pyfer.

A. T. PYFER.

A. T. Pyfer, the present manager of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., has been with the firm for five years, in the capacity of bookkeeper until the death of James Hartshorne, whose confidential man he was, the two working together in harmony in all business transactions.

Mr. Pyfer was born August 26, 1878, near the city of Freeport, Ill. He attended the country schools and Mt. Morris College, where he prepared himself for teaching, afterwards taking a business and shorthand course in the Freeport College of Commerce, graduating in 1899.

After filling various clerical positions he engaged with John Bauscher, Jr., the well-known florist at Freeport, Ill., remaining two years. He went to Joliet in 1901 as bookkeeper for the Chicago Carnation Co., always taking an active interest in the carnation industry, becoming acquainted with the trade in general and is well qualified for his present position as manager. Mr. Pyfer is a member of the American Carnation Society and also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

CLEVELAND, O.—J. M. Gasser, has returned from the sanitorium at Cincinnati, where he has spent the last month. He will take a trip south before resuming business cares.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. — C. C. Pollworth was busy a part of last week looking after his Irish Diggings Lead & Zinc Co. holdings in southwestern Wisconsin.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Winter is here. Many of the growers brought their plants to market, only to have them frozen while standing on the streets trying to dispose of their stock. Some have provided cases with glass fronts and lamps in the inside, which kept their blooms out of harm's way.

Everybody is making preparations for the holidays. The boats and railroads are rushing holly into the commission houses. Many shipments are being made to the west. We are receiving holly from four states.

There is quite a demand for any kind of novelty. Paper bells will be used extensively this year in the decorations. The retailers are already making in their windows every indication of a prosperous holiday season.

Business last week was as good as was expected, but nothing of consequence was going on. Some prominent funerals took place and everything was used up. Callas are more steady. Roses seem to be enough to supply the demand. Carnations are doing as well as can be expected. Single violets are bringing 60 cents a hundred. Some chrysanthemums are yet to be had.

Horticultural Exhibition.

The ninth annual meeting of the Maryland State Horticultural Society was held in the Fifth Regiment Armory December 5 and 6 and was declared to be the most successful meeting yet held. Orlando Harrison, of Berlin, responded to the mayor's welcome. President E. P. Cohill made his annual address. Wm. Duckham, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, spoke on the chrysanthemum. An interesting talk was given by A. Herrington, also of Madison, N. J. Governor Warfield closed the meeting with a short address, after which a banquet followed at the Eutan house, where the governor was the guest of honor.

J. Bolgiano & Sons, H. F. Michell Co. and Griffith & Turner Co. made large displays of their products. The Franklin Davis Nursery Co. furnished hundreds of trees for the decorations. The city parks made a fine show of various kinds of plants.

The first prizes for floral displays were awarded to Stevenson Bros., John Cook, I. H. Moss, G. Morrison, F. C. Baur, Edward Kress, F. C. Banner, H. Weber & Sons, R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons, and E. Herman. Second prizes were awarded to I. H. Moss and John Cook. There was a long list of winners of awards for fruits and vegetables.

C. Gregorius showed stevia, a vase of Jeanne Nonin chrysanthemums and three vases of Dr. Enguehard.

I. H. Moss had a collection of cedars and various plants and a vase of Golden Gate and Bride roses.

Stevenson Bros. had an extra fine display of roses and carnations.

F. C. Baur had a vase of splendid mignonette.

Edward Kress had a beautiful wreath of Camellia Japonica entwined with large single violets and backed up with maidenhair ferns.

G. H. Rhodes, gardener to A. J. Tormey, exhibited a vase of his new mum, Mrs. Tormey, and a vase of Robert Craig carnation.

C. H. Totty, Madison, N. J., had a collection of pompon chrysanthemums.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons made a large display of their specialties.

E. Herman made a fine showing of primroses, peppers and chrysanthemums.

John Cook displayed a number of vases of roses and a vase of Enchantress carnation seedlings.

George Balderston, Colora, Md., had a neat wreath of sweet alyssum.

George Morrison's exhibit consisted of a vase of American Beauty, a vase of Kaiserin roses and a vase of Lawson carnations, also a collection of begonias and a large number of various kinds of plants, too many to mention. He also had a fine collection of pandanus.

Various Notes.

Edward Kress, East North avenue, claims he is the only florist that has Camellia Japonica in the state of Maryland.

The new chrysanthemum, Mrs. Tormey, made quite a hit at the show last week. G. H. Rhodes is the originator.

There seems to be a great demand for Mrs. Emma Hahn's stall in the market. It cannot be bought separately from the other business.

T. N. Gray was in town to buy galax leaves.

H. Reinhardt, Orangeville, Md., has taken up his father's business.

N. C. Davis, Landsdown, Md., is growing a large number of bulbs for Easter.

J. L. T.

BOONE, IA.—J. Loehrer has opened a store in connection with the L. W. Hintz drug store. Mrs. Loehrer will have charge.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers and Correspondents.

Advertisers and correspondents are asked to note that both Christmas and New Year's fall on Tuesday, the busiest day in the office of the REVIEW. It will be necessary that copy for the issues of December 27 and January 3 be placed in our hands one day earlier than usual.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market has been erratic since last report. Stormy days have been a factor and shipping demand has some days been heavy, others light, so that on the whole trade has hardly been satisfactory; but it is never brisk in the first weeks of December. Monday saw a good shipping demand and nearly every one hustling for the right kind of stock for out-of-town orders, while there was at the same time a considerable quantity of material not shipable which was not in request and brought low prices if sold at all. It is to be expected that this week will see only light supplies, for all the growers will be doing what they safely may toward providing a supply for Christmas. They will not cut anything from now on which is not needed in the market.

If there is any one thing now in short supply it is Beauties. The demand for this leading item continues strong and receipts are promptly cleaned up. Quality is excellent with every one. Other roses are abundant and cooler weather has improved the quality. There are Killarney, Richmond and Chatenay of superlative excellence. Many orders are offered for these specialties for Christmas.

Carnations are equal to requirements and with practically all the growers the quality is all that could be asked. About the only exception to this is Lawson with some growers, for many are seen which have not yet attained a greater length than six inches of stem. On the other hand, with other growers Lawson continues to hold its old-time quality. Enchantress is superb. It is the one carnation with which no grower makes a failure. But Enchantress is so abundant this season that only the best of this variety make the extra price which has been asked for it in previous seasons. White sorts are sought because a large part of the demand is for funeral work. Harrisii and callas also are in active demand for the same reason, and it has in the past week been difficult to find them for late orders. Most of the Harrisii in the market are short in stem.

There have been only moderate receipts of violets, but the supply has been more than enough to go around, and, if violets have made lower averages in other markets, Rhinebeck growers are entitled to question the universal prosperity of which we hear so much. While the best violets have sold for $1.25, others have gone as low as 40 cents per hundred. The fragrant singles have sold well. Last week returns were rather better than those of this week because the charity bazaar at the Coliseum created a special demand for violets.

Quite a number of good chrysanthemums now are available. It appears that the supply of late sorts will be quite heavy. Prices realized have been only fair. Mignonette is in and when of first-class quality sells well. Large quantities of stevia are used, but the supply of Paper Whites and Romans is far ahead of the demand.

Among the specialties orchids are in short supply. A few good sweet peas are seen and sell at sight. Bouvardia sells well. A few pansies have been received and are quickly taken.

Green Goods.

Although bouquet green is scarce, some of it is of splendid quality. The E. F. Winterson Co. has had stock that readily sold at 15 cents per pound in small lots. Perhaps because of the scarcity of bouquet green, boxwood has been selling at a surprising rate. A quiet market for this was looked for because all the houses were heavily stocked a few weeks ago, but in the last week many have been cleaned out. Holly is in good supply and fine.

There is considerable alarm at the fern situation. Those in storage are reported not keeping well and the quality of the regular shipments coming from Massachusetts is not satisfactory.

Smilax and asparagus are abundant. Some splendid adiantum is being received.

Christmas Prospects.

The retailers are all counting on the largest Christmas trade they ever have done, and their enthusiasm is reflected in the confidence of the wholesalers regarding the large volume of business to be handled. The general anticipation is that supplies will be large, but of course much will depend on the character of the weather in the next ten days. We have had so much cloudy weather that we certainly are due for some sunny days, but if we do not get them we still shall have good quantities of stuff, for most growers report heavy crops just coming on.

Once again it is in order to caution growers against holding back their stock. It many times has happened that the market has been strong for a week before the holiday and taken a pronounced slump the morning after the shipping orders were dispatched. The bulk of the shipments this year go out on Sunday.

Growers also should not forget that Christmas is a holiday at which most flowers are used for gifts and no one is willing to use for this purpose anything but fresh stock. Pickled goods are absolutely without value.

Christmas Shipments.

Christmas shipments from Chicago will be made under difficult circumstances, as the bulk of the shipments must go out on Sunday. The trouble lies in the fact that incoming trains are not nearly so numerous on the Sabbath as on week days. The through trains go out as usual, but the locals do not run Sunday. Then, too, the express companies make no pick-ups after noon on Sunday. An effort is being made to get special wagons for the wholesale cut flower district all day Sunday, December 23; otherwise the wholesalers will have to make deliveries to the depots by hired conveyances.

Growers should bear in mind that shipments must get to Chicago Sunday morning and buyers will help by getting their orders in as early as possible.

Another Rose-Pink Enchantress.

Fortune has indeed been unkind to the carnation grower whom it has not favored with a sport of Enchantress. There are sports of almost every color, but the

We shall have large supplies

FOR CHRISTMAS

No doubt of that. We shall have a large cut of all Roses of extra good quality. Maids, Brides, Gates and Chatenay. The special call for red stock will make Richmond and Liberty scarce; we shall have a fair supply. Our Carnations will be in full crop and the best stock we ever shipped; our Enchantress have been the finest in town this fall, and we shall have them still better for Christmas. Fancy, home-grown California Violets and the cream of the Hudson River Doubles.

Poinsettias

Fancy, long-stemmed. Prices, fancy, $4.00 per doz.; smaller grade, $2.00 to $3.00 per doz. Shipped in the original boxes of 50, as packed at the greenhouse.

Also large supplies of Mignonette, Valley, Sweet Peas, Bouvardia, Harrisii, Callas, Paper Whites, Romans, Stevia, etc. Bouquet Green is scarce; use Asparagus strings. Plenty other Green Goods, as always.

We urge early correspondence; give us your order for what you think you will need and if you find yourself running short write or wire additional orders; if seasonable flowers are to be had in Chicago, they are to be had at Amling's.

rose-pink is the best of all. There are several rose-pink sports besides the one distributed by S. S. Skidelsky, originating with B. Schroeter, of Detroit. E. Blameuser, at Niles Center, has a Rose-pink Enchantress of which he has worked up a large stock and which has met with much favor as a cut flower, the blooms being handled by Holton & Hunkel at Milwaukee. He is busy propagating and will have considerable stock for spring.

Coatsworth on Cuttings.

"All the rose cuttings we shall take this year," said L. Coatsworth, "will be enough to replant the greenhouses of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., New Castle, Ind., U. S. A. With a rose market such as we have enjoyed this fall and have in prospect as long as our stock holds its present quality we shall leave the cutting business to others. Of course we must propagate beyonds our needs for a margin of safety, but last year we cut off two crops of Killarney to get wood for cuttings. We haven't seen a day this fall when the flowers were not worth more than the cuttings. It is more or less so with other varieties."

There will be a big call for young stock of Killarney next spring. The success the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. and others are having with it will greatly stimulate the demand.

Various Notes.

O. J. Friedman has sued the New theater, recently organized to elevate the stage, for $418 for the decorations with which he helped them do it.

John Weiland, at Evanston, had a narrow escape from a disastrous fire at two o'clock in the morning one day last week. The sheds were destroyed and the palm house damaged so that there was some loss on stock. He figures a thousand-dollar bill would not more than set him even.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett have booked passage on the White Star steamer leaving New York February 5 for a tour of Egypt and the Nile. They anticipate being in Europe four or five months.

Kennicott Bros. Co. reports that one of its growers will have his entire crop of Jeanne Nonin chrysanthemums in for Christmas.

It is stated that one of the reasons for the increased supply of chrysanthemums this year was that many lettuce growers, finding the first crop of lettuce not especially profitable, this year planted their houses to chrysanthemums and are only now starting their lettuce.

It is reported that W. L. Palinsky's azaleas were not shipped according to his forwarding instructions and met a delay which resulted in the complete loss of the stock. He refused to accept it from the carrier.

When Mrs. C. W. Reimers, of Louisville, was in town last week, she made arrangements with E. H. Hunt to handle her poinsettias this season.

Vaughan & Sperry have had a quantity of California pepper berries. They have sold well, although many of the retailers do not seem to be familiar with this very useful berried green. It will be better known in a week.

All the retailers are making preparations to handle the increased Christmas business. Delivery is a great problem with many, but with others lack of selling space is troublesome. A. Lange has secured a room on the second floor of the Heyworth building for his plant display and salesroom.

J. P. Risch has been having a serious time with an ulcerated tooth, which put him out of the running for several days. His father also was in bed all last week with a severe cold.

H. Woods Co., on South Water street, is doing a large business on greens with the florists. They will have a refrigerator car of California pepper berries in this week.

C. L. Washburn says that never in his experience has the glut of chrysanthemums had so little effect on the demand for and prices of Beauties as during the season just closed.

F. R. Falkenstein, Naperville, Ill., is sending E. C. Amling some especially good Golden Chadwick. The form and color of the flower as he grows it are especially good.

There is a difference of opinion as to what Christmas will bring forth in supplies of poinsettias. Some houses say they will be scarce, others that large supplies will be available and prices likely to rule lower than usual.

There was a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society at P. J. Hauswirth's last Friday afternoon to close up 1906 flower show affairs. The financial outcome was much more satisfactory than was at first thought likely in view of the falling off in attendance—and everyone is happy.

At the Northern Illinois State Normal School the John C. Moninger Co. recently erected a conservatory, with heating ap-partus and everything complete, even to a live alligator for the pool of water in the center.

C. W. McKellar reports quite a call for gardenias, but great difficulty in filling orders. Cattleyas also are scarce.

At Peter Reinberg's they report a fine sale for the Mrs. Marshall Field rose. Mrs. Field herself often orders them of the leading retailers.

N. J. Wietor says that Wietor Bros. have not felt the slack demand of which there is more or less general complaint. He says that they have had rather heavier and steadier cuts than usual all through the autumn, and that if December is proportionately as good as November, he will be more than satisfied.

Theo. Hauschke reports good business for Thanksgiving and predicts a record Christmas trade for all the retailers on the northwest side.

Sam Pearce is sending some fine poinsettias to Zech & Mann. He has not heretofore grown them in quantity.

George Reinberg has another big lot of poinsettias for Christmas. Last year they were fine and brought such good prices that more were grown this year.

George Weinhoeber is at home from Boston, where he has been studying landscaping with Olmsted Bros. He purposes setting up for himself in the same line here in the west.

The A. L. Randall Co. says that for Christmas violets will in all probability be, as at Thanksgiving, not in so heavy supply as last year, but still enough to take care of all orders.

Sinner Bros. have made good money on their Harrisii and callas in the last fortnight.

At J. A. Budlong's, Phil Schupp says that as an all-round white carnation Boston Market is not beaten. It is a fine flower, good bloomer and splendid shipper.

According to the Aurora Beacon, Col. Fabyan, of Bliss, Fabyan & Co., the dry goods commission firm in the Medina Temple, is the owner of the Riverbank Greenhouses, Batavia, Ill., conducted by Engledew & Co. The manager's name is Hamlin. Engledew is in the office of Bliss, Fabyan & Co.

The Foley Mfg. Co. finds, as is inevitably the case, that work on its new factory is progressing slower than was expected. They now say they will not be fully settled there before March 1, but still in time for the busy season.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. had tulips as early as December 8, so far as records go, the first of any in the country. They expect to have quite a few in good shape for Christmas.

Club meeting tonight.

Visitors.

Among the numerous visitors of the last week were: H. V. Hunkel, Milwaukee; P. M. Palez, with J. W. Vestal & Son, Little Rock, Ark.; A. Siegel, St. Louis; Mrs. C. W. Reimers, Louisville, Ky.; Henry Baer, Peoria, Ill.; A. Cohn, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Col. E. H. R. Green, Dallas, Tex.; G. A. Colberg, of Colberg & Lemke, St. Paul; E. Loeber, Cincinnati; W. H. Weinschenk, New Castle, Pa.; S. B. Wertheimer, New York.

HIGHLAND, ILL.—Fred E. Hollard, the florist and gardener, opened his store November 26 in the Mosiman building.

LOWELL, MASS.—George A. Saunders, of Mellor & Saunders, florists, assigned all his property, November 30, for the benefit of his creditors, to his son, Arthur W. Saunders.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Trade last week was below the average. The new week opened with the worst sleet storm the florists can remember. Trains were delayed and business suffered. Louis Kuebler, a brother of W. H. Kuebler, the wholesale florist of Brooklyn, was quite seriously injured by falling on the icy street. Doubtless this condition in the cut flower trade will remain throughout the week, as has always been the case in the weeks preceding the holidays. In the meantime great preparations are being expectantly made by every one for a tremendous Christmas business.

Beauties are firm at $60 per hundred for the best. Selected Brides and Maids bring $10 per hundred. In occasional sales a higher figure is sometimes possible, but these rates will cover the general average.

Carnations grow better daily. Orchids are scarce. Violets are abundant, 75 cents per hundred was top on Monday. There will be enough and to spare for Christmas. Any great advance in value is impossible. There are plenty of hyacinths and narcissi. Gardenias and valley are in demand but short in supply.

Holly, wreathing, wild smilax, all the holiday goods, including Christmas trees, are abundant. The blooming plant supply is perfect and all the growers are stocked bountifully.

Club Meeting.

Notwithstanding the rain, over 100 members attended the club meeting Monday evening. Four new members were elected and Messrs. Gleckner, Howells, Seligman, Levy, Cockrill and Tierney nominated. The resignation of John N. May was accepted with regret and he was elected an honorary member. The same courtesy was accorded Charles H. Allen. The resignation of Emil Steffens also was accepted.

The result of the election was as follows: For president, C. H. Totty, 72 votes, J. B. Nugent, Jr., 29 votes; for vice-president, A. J. Manda 74, H. O. May 28; for secretary, John Young 76, A. J. Guttman 25; for treasurer, A. W. Wheeler 54, Charles Weathered 48; for trustees, John Scott 83, Walter Sheridan 61, Julius Roehrs, Jr., 56, John Donaldson 37, A. V. Hallock 28, Charles Lenker 25.

Strong and appreciative addresses were delivered by Messrs. Totty, Manda, Young and Wheeler, each pledging earnest effort to maintain the position of the club.

E. S. Osborn, the nurseryman of Rochester, was present, a guest of Mr. Lenker.

The award committee, Messrs. Totty, Scott and Manda, announced their decisions as to the fine exhibits of the evening, as follows:

From A. Demeusy, of Flatbush, vase of a crimson carnation seedling scoring 85 points and awarded a certificate.

From Dailledouze Bros., Carnation Welcome, pink, a sport of Lawson, scored 89 points and awarded a certificate.

From Guttman & Haines, Imperial, scored 82 points, and Pink Imperial, scored 85 points; awarded the thanks of the club and in line for its certificate.

From Mr. Tierney, of Navesink, a new red, Mrs. Robt. Hartshorne, awarded 74 points and the thanks of the club.

A. C. Zvolanek, Bound Brook, vase of winter-flowering sweet peas.

From F. G. Mense, Glen Cove, single violets, awarded cultural certificate.

From H. Turner, Castle Gould, L. I., specimen Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, awarded a cultural certificate.

The president appointed Messrs. Traendly, Wheeler and Stewart to draw up resolutions on the death of the wife of E. V. Hallock, of Queens, L. I. Mrs. Hallock died suddenly on Saturday and funeral services were held on Monday.

Various Notes.

David Clarke's Sons are ready for Christmas, if their well stocked big store is any indication. The only anxiety seems to be the need of room. Novelties in miniature mantel decorations attract much attention. Hundreds of baskets filled with flowering and foliage plants will be the specialty here this season.

Thorley and Fleischman now have a quartette of retail stores, straws which show which way the wind of progress and opportunity is blowing in this fast growing metropolis, and yet there is room.

Charles Millang has three centers of trade this season, in all of which business has been booming. At his new premises on Twenty-eighth street, near Fifth avenue, he contemplates a plant market in the spring.

B. S. Slinn, Jr., has some grand shipments of violets daily that compare favorably with anything coming down the river.

McManus has made elaborate preparations for the Christmas orchid demand. He reports the long distance telephone warm with inquiries and advance orders, the scarcity of the supply making early engagements a wise precaution.

As the years roll J. K. Allen's business grows. "Every morning at six" the bird of good omen sings his song of hope. Most roosters of 20 years are tough, but this is an exception to the rule.

Perkins & Schumann are delighted with the new store and the first Christmas there promises to be an inspiration. The union of young blood and the veteran of 1872 cannot but win a share of the constantly growing prosperity of the wholesale business.

Ford Bros. report a year double any other in their history. So much for the big store and its conveniences and unsullied reputation. It's a good sign when growers never change their representatives.

James Hart has a big store and is adding holly and other Christmas evergreens to his cut flower department. He has done a large business in hotel winter decoration this fall and is as ambitious as he was in 1871, when he was the pioneer. Thirty-five years is a long pull in the wholesale flower business.

William Starke has made a fine reputation for himself as a plantsman and is fast building up a business that is permanent and creditable. His trade in evergreens, boxwood, palms and ferns the last three months has been phenomenal.

A. Warendorff's windows never looked more attractive than now, though they are never commonplace and always demonstrate artistic taste and skill.

moving at their headquarters in the Coogan building, where Mr. Nash presides with the suavity of one to the manor born.

The tropical effect at the great store of Alexander McConnell in the Arcade on Fifth avenue is intensified by the height of the ceilings. The move to this splendid center was most wise and business has increased beyond all anticipation.

A. Herrmann reports a tremendous Christmas trade, a shortage in moss wreaths and immortelles and the usual yearly growth.

The National Florists' Board of Trade reports many accessions to membership in the last few weeks.

H. E. Froment has maintained and enlarged the big business of his predecessor and is increasing his total daily output to record figures as the products of his extensive growers increase. His receipts of Beauties from the new houses of his patrons are now enormous. The old force of lieutenants remains.

John Seligman & Co. have built up a fine trade during 1906. Their big store is excellently located. These young men are both popular and the coming year will mark still greater progress.

A. M. Henshaw says the square deal is bearing fruit. His present quarters are limited when the bulk and growth of his trade are considered.

George Cotsonas & Co. now occupy the whole store at 50 West Twenty-eighth street. It is none too large for the immense trade in ferns, galax and wreathing which they are doing for the holidays. Day and night an increased force is at work on orders.

A. L. Young & Co. have abundant room and conveniences now that the addition to their fine store at 54 West Twenty-eighth street is completed.

Russin & Hanfling have their building full of baskets and useful novelties for Christmas. They manufacture many specialties in supply goods, sheaves, etc., and will take their place with the other successful supply houses of the country.

A. J. Guttman is enthusiastic over his latest carnation acquisitions, Imperial and Pink Imperial. They attracted much attention at the club meeting. Victory maintains its splendid reputation.

Myer, the retail florist of Madison avenue, has just added a fine wagon to his other acquisitions.

Young & Nugent maintain their finely decorated window. Mr. Nugent has the same skill in artistic floral effect that he has in managing concoctions for the inner man, a skill that has been no small factor in the club's progress the last three years.

Leikens wears his perpetual smile these days, his branch at the Belmont and his attractive store near the Waldorf giving him ample cause for self congratulation.

Traendly & Schenck seem to think three floors too little for their coming holiday exhibitions. Perhaps another year will make the use of the whole building a necessity.

Thomas Young's new wholesale store at 42 West Twenty-eighth street is now completed and most convenient.

Bonnot Bros. are shipping more and more to out-of-town sections and are handling more fine roses as the days grow shorter.

The author of "How to Grow Violets" has left his impress on Dutchess county and made for himself an imperishable monument in the glass houses devoted to the raising of the popular little fragrant flower.

John Young will have his own Beauties from "the largest house" and the entire output of the Cottage Gardens carnation factory for Christmas.

Gunther Bros. still hold the fort on Twenty-ninth street, where they have grown and flourished since 1888. They expect a larger holiday trade than usual.

Frank Millang manages to be on deck now daily, though still on crutches and nursing his broken ankle. Inactivity is so unusual with Mr. Millang he is having the ordeal of his life, but he will be himself again by Christmas. The Cut Flower Exchange is a busy place these days.

Joseph Fenrich, with Totty's mums and roses and Schultheis' valley, among other good things, says business has grown most encouragingly during the year he has been in his new store on Twenty-eighth street.

Lecakes & Co. have a big force at work and many thousands of yards of roping ready for advance orders. Jno. J. Foley is the same efficient manager as ever.

The Geller Company's new store is fast assuming ship-shape and is already crowded with Christmas novelties. Its display conveniences are excellent.

The Kervan Company is receiving big shipments of wild smilax, holly and Christmas greens of all kinds from the south and report a good advance in the volume of their business for the year now closing.

A new store has been opened by E. A. Reth at One Hundred and Thirteenth

Our Stock of Cut Flowers and Greens

For Christmas will be complete in every respect. The quality promises to be fine, the supply in some lines a trifle short. Poinsettias, the ideal Christmas flower, is a leader with us this year. You can't beat ours for quality. Here are a few of the big sellers that you will want—we will have them in quantity:

street and St. Nicholas avenue, a splendid locality. It is finely fitted in gold and white enamel, with an abundance of mirrors and a superb stock of plants of every variety. Mr. Reth was for thirty-seven years with Bridgeman, the seedsman, and sold his interests to the Rickards Bros. a few months ago. His old friends will be pleased to know of his new venture and he has the best wishes for success.

For rapid development of the seed business and steady establishment of success, the Rickards Bros. take the palm. In four short months they have demonstrated their ability far beyond their expectations. Personal popularity, hustling, public confidence and perpetual good nature are the foundations of their progress. Large purchases have been made in Europe for the spring trade. Next summer one of the brothers will visit the old country. No more enthusiastic salesmen exist. Good will of a host of friends in the trade is shown. Practically years of canvassing make their visits welcome. Unique advertising has been a feature of their progress. Their "mule barometer" is the latest reminder. Everybody uses it as a sure weather guide. They send one to all enquirers. The Bridgeman name will be perpetuated another century.

Ernest Sampson, formerly with the Hodgson Co., of Fifth avenue, is now associated with C. W. Eberman in the wholesale plant business at 53 West Thirtieth street. A cut flower department will be added to the enterprise after the holidays. Mr. Eberman is greatly elated with his success and has his store well stocked with every variety of plant. He will have an extensive Christmas display.

The Limprecht Supply Co. will have the decoration of the big Fifth avenue cathedral for Christmas, as usual. Seven decorations in the last week is the company's record. The store has been thoroughly repaired since the fire, and the son of Max Limprecht is maintaining the excellent record made by his father and proving himself to be an efficient manager.

At 10 West Twenty-ninth street, close to Broadway, William Donohoe has opened a branch store for the holidays. The location is excellent and only a few doors from his headquarters. Mr. Donohoe is preparing for his biggest Christmas and has enjoyed a most successful year, his trade growing constantly in volume and quality.

Brooklyn.

Harry Crawbuck, of Brooklyn, handles great quantities of wild smilax for Caldwell, and all other Christmas goods, and says Brooklynites have no reason to cross the bridge for anything in his line.

Bonnet & Blake now receive the entire stock grown by John N. May, of Summit, N. J., and many other noted Jersey and Long Island growers. Mr. Bonnet is still on the sick list and has had many weeks of suffering, but hopes to be recovered for the holiday trade. The new store is just what was needed for their growing business.

Truman Flagler, at 926 Fulton street, reports a rapidly increasing trade and brilliant prospects for a great Christmas in his fine family section.

Robert G. Wilson has now two establishments in Brooklyn, the Shannon greenhouses on Greene avenue proving a great convenience. The growth of Mr. Wilson's business has been wonderful.

William H. Kuebler thinks before another year his growth will make a larger store a necessity. The year closing finds great progress made.

Hicks & Crawbuck have about everything in florists' supplies any Brooklynite can need and number many growers of suberb roses on their books. There are few larger or more convenient stores than 76 Court street, Brooklyn, in the wholesale business. J. Austin Shaw.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Business conditions are a trifle less buoyant than a week ago. Flowers are still scarce, and prices advancing on some varieties, but the lull which precedes a holiday rush is evident in the demand. Carnations continue the scarcest item on the flower list. Fancies are readily sold at fine prices, while even ordinary stock commands figures that seem high. Violets are fairly plentiful, while the demand has fallen off to such an extent that prices are fully fifty per cent less than one week ago. Roses are advancing in price. The quality of the higher grades is fully up to midwinter form. On this stock, too, the demand is slightly less than a week ago, the smaller red roses being especially affected.

Chrysanthemums are nearly over, the fancies being represented by Jeanne Nonin and Dorothy Faust, both white, while the select stock is chiefly Mrs.

Jerome Jones, yellow and white. Inquiry as to whether chrysanthemums will last until Christmas elicited the response that they will unless they can be sold sooner, which fairly sums up the case.

Poinsettias have made their appearance; the stock is unusually fine and plentiful. A feature of the market has been the extraordinary scarcity of lilies of the valley, due, it was stated by the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., to an unexpected falling off in the supply, which will be overcome in a few days. While this scarcity lasted, ordinary stock was eagerly taken by buyers who generally demand the best.

Cattleyas, cypripediums, dendrobiums and mixed orchids are in good supply and sell readily. Gardenias are extraordinarily scarce, the supply being almost nil, although we are promised heavier shipments shortly. Mignonette is another scarce commodity. It is said to be late, and it is understood that it has not always been profitable to the growers in past seasons. The present prices ought to satisfy anyone who knows how to handle it. Romans are in good demand, but Paper Whites sell slowly, although fine. There has been an improvement in the demand for adiantum fronds. Asparagus plumosus is selling better than A. Sprengeri.

Christmas Prospects.

Indications for the holidays point to an unusually fine stock of American Beauties, Bride and Bridemaid roses, at prices that good judges believe will be about the same as those of last season. There will be more red roses than last season, Liberty being reinforced by additional plantings of Richmond. It is probable, however, that the demand will consume the entire stock at fair prices, as there have never been enough red roses during the holidays. Poinsettia, the Christmas flower, though perhaps it is more accurate to say bract, promises to give ample opportunity for Christmas decorations, for it will be more plentiful and better than ever before. Violets promise to be plentiful if the weather gives them only half a chance, and indications point to moderate prices on these dainty flowers. The prospects of heavy gardenia crops, so bright in November, are clouded in uncertainty at this writing. Orchids will be as plentiful, or more so, than ever before, but it is unlikely that the supply will equal the demand. Of carnations it is difficult to write with certainty. It seems, however, safe to say that while the quality will average high, the quantity will be far below that of last season. Even the growers who have not been troubled with stem-rot are shipping fewer flowers to town than the size of their places would seem to warrant.

Summing up the whole situation, the supply of flowers should be all that could be desired, barring only carnations, to suit the most fastidious demands. The wholesalers have been making extraordinary preparations for the distribution of holly, mistletoe, laurel and other greens. All are reported in fine condition.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. will be strong on American Beauty roses; also on Brides and Bridesmaids. Their stock of poinsettias will be a feature.

Joseph Heacock, of Wyncote, who has just returned from New York, says that three or four of the leading retailers there prefer Richmond to Liberty. They claim that among other advantages the former rose is a better keeper.

Geo. Cook, of Washington, D. C., was a visitor at the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. a few days ago.

W. F. Gude, of Washington, D. C., states that there were as many flowers used at the funeral of Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern Railroad, as at the funeral of the late President McKinley.

P. J. Lynch, of West Grove, Pa., has the sympathy of his many friends in the death of his mother.

Robert Schock, with Julius Kohler & Son, Frankford, will assist W. E. McKissick immediately after the holidays. Mr. Schock has been in his present position for eleven years and is one of the most promising young men in our profession.

Wm. Klingsporn, brother of Paul J., is selling for Berger Bros.

M. Rice & Co. have just received the largest importation of exclusive florists' ribbon that has ever been entered at the port of Philadelphia, among which was their ombre-shaded ribbon in twenty new combination flower shades. This ribbon must be seen to get an idea of how pretty it is.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. will receive 150 cases of supplies for Christmas on the steamer Augusta Victoria, now due at the port of New York. Two other steamers, with cargo for this firm, will

Type of Side Hill Vegetable Houses Used By W. H. Weinschenk, New Castle, Pa.

Vegetable Forcing.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Cucumbers, 75c to $1.25 doz.; leaf lettuce, 25c to 40c case; radishes, 25c to 75c doz. bunches.

New York, Dec. 10.—The demand for fancy stock takes all greenhouse vegetables of good quality in spite of heavy supplies from the south and a slow market. Spinach is one of the items most in demand. Fresh asparagus, $1 to $2 bunch; cucumbers, No. 1, $1 to $1.25 doz.; No. 2, $2 to $4 box; Boston lettuce, $1 to $1.50 strap; white mushrooms, 60c to $1 lb.; brown mushrooms, 50c to 85c lb.; radishes, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches; tomatoes, 10c to 25c lb.

Boston, Dec. 10.—Tomatoes, 25c lb.; cucumbers, $3.50 to $9 box; lettuce, 25c to 50c doz.; radishes, $1.50 to $2 box; mint, 40c doz.; mushrooms, 75c to $1 lb.

THE LARGEST HOUSE.

Several times there have appeared in the Review items to the effect that So-and-so was building the largest greenhouse in America, only to have some other enterprising gentleman arise to call attention to the fact that his new structure was six inches longer, or wider. Once again the statement is offered that here is the largest greenhouse under one roof to be found anywhere in America. Will someone please go it one better?

The new house in question is to be built by W. H. Weinschenk, New Castle, Pa. This is a side hill structure, the total width being 120 feet and the length 600 feet. The house therefore covers 72,000 square feet of land, or more than an acre and a half. The wide side of the house on the slope is eighty-one feet. At the top of the hill the house runs back thirty-nine feet. It is to be used for lettuce and cucumbers. The Moninger Co., Chicago, has the order for roof material.

TOMATOES.

I have the back bench in a greenhouse planted with tomatoes, Frogmore Selected. The seed was sown August 1 and the fruit on the first three branches is ripening. Above, the fruit is not setting well, as the blossoms drop on the slightest pretext. The branches holding the fruit seem to have no strength. I have been letting the soil dry out after each watering and possibly have done so too much. Have fed with bone twice, wood ashes twice and liquid manure twice and have cut off some of the foliage. What would you suggest?

F. D. B.

Your trouble is by no means an uncommon one and is probably due more to the variety you grow than to any fault in cultivation. The flowers are dropping off because they are not setting. I have not had any experience with this variety, so am unable to state just how it acts in this respect. Some varieties will set quite freely in autumn, while the weather is bright, but prove quite troublesome when the dull, short days come. In some cases the trouble is caused through lack of pollen, but in others the pollen, though plentiful, fails to accomplish its proper functions through the unsuitable condition of the stigma, which later in some varieties requires much more sunlight than in others to place them in the proper condition to receive the pollen.

It is important that these points should be considered in the selection of a winter forcing variety. The lack of pollen can be overcome by hand fertilization where a little pollen, carefully used, can be made to go a long way, but when the fault is with the stigma, the variety had better be replaced with one more suitable. W. S. Croydon.

MILDEW ON LETTUCE.

Is there a remedy or preventive for mildew on lettuce? Although I keep my lettuce on the dry side, yet I lose a large per cent of small plants in flats when there are several cloudy, damp days together. W. N. T.

There must be something wrong with the atmospheric conditions of your house.

It Would Be Quite Proper for us to tell you that you are dissatisfied with wearing and lasting qualities of Rubber Hose that are offered in different catalogs as suitable for greenhouse purposes. Just what it is it would be hard for me to say without seeing it, but lettuce at that stage of growth is not subject to the attacks of mildew in a house where it has the proper temperature and sufficient fresh air. A too high temperature would cause a soft growth and leave it an easy prey to this and kindred diseases during dull, cloudy weather, but the more probable cause is lack of proper airing. A close atmosphere is congenial, both for the breeding and spreading of the spores of fungi. Try to maintain a night temperature not exceeding 45 degrees, with 60 degrees by day in bright weather, and give air to sweeten the atmosphere on all possible occasions. Keep the plants fully exposed to the light to keep the foliage firm and avoid crowding and I do not think that you will have much more trouble from mildew.

W. S. CROYDON.

CUCUMBERS.

Enemies and Diseases.

To produce the best results in the greenhouse, untiring attention must be given to the maintenance of proper moisture and temperature conditions. A keen watch must be kept for the appearance of aphis or mildew, and upon the occurrence of either of these pests prompt and effective methods must be employed for stamping it out, says L. C. Corbett in the recent bulletin of the Department of Agriculture.

The cucumber is a tender plant and will not endure some of the severe methods employed for combating aphis and mildew on other plants. The careful spraying of cucumbers with ammoniacal carbonate of copper solution, which is made by dissolving five ounces of carbonate of copper in three pints of strong ammonia (26 degrees) is recommended. This stock solution should be diluted to forty-five gallons when used—that is, one pint of the solution will make fifteen gallons of the spraying mixture. This should be applied with a strong force pump through either a Vermorel or a similar nozzle and should keep the house free from mildew.

An additional safeguard is to keep the heating pipes at all times covered with sulphur. When it is not desirable to moisten the foliage of the plants with a spray the distillation of sulphur in accordance with the following plan is very effective. This is accompanied by some danger, however, and the novice should carefully observe and carry out every detail of the directions here given.

The apparatus for distilling sulphur in a greenhouse for the treatment of mildew consists of a small, single-burner oil stove. One with a top six inches square will serve the purpose. Secure two iron or tin pans similar to those used for the baking of layer cake and, if possible, have one pan larger in diameter by two inches than the other. In the larger pan place a layer of sand, as free from organic matter as possible, about one-half inch deep. Upon this set the second pan, which contains flowers of sulphur in sufficient quantity to fill the pan about half full of sulphur when it is molten. Light the lamp, heating the sand to a sufficient degree to melt and maintain the sulphur in a molten condition, but exercise the greatest care in regulating the flame of the lamp, so

AS THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS WILL SHOW:

"Some time ago we put in 100 feet of your system on trial and it has given perfect satisfaction. Send 500 feet more at once and we shall want 1800 feet additional as soon as our new houses are ready. We think the system a very good thing and consider the labor saved will pay for the apparatus in one season."
DAVIS BROS., Morrison, Ill.

"We wish to have our entire range fitted up with your watering system. We are much pleased with the working of the section which we have in at present and are perfectly satisfied that the time will be very short till all up-to-date growers will use the Wittbold system instead of the present method of watering with the hose. When the nozzles are properly spaced, they throw exactly the same amount of water to all parts of the bench."
W. B. DAVIS & CO., Cucumber Growers, Aurora, Ill.

"It is a fine thing and I wonder why greenhouse men have not taken hold more. It should come into general use. It puts the water on more evenly than the average man will with the hose."
STEPHEN HYDE, Vegetable Grower, Carthage, Mo.

"We have your system in one of our Ficus houses; it is working fine and is doing as much as ten men would do in the old way in the same time. We like it so well that as soon as we can arrange for water supply we shall equip our whole place."
A. C. OELSCHIG & SON, Savannah, Ga.

"We have the Wittbold system in six houses 33x200 and it works to perfection, doing the watering better than the average man can do with the hose. We will equip our other two plants next season; no more watering with the hose for us."
CHAMBERLIN & BUNKER, Vegetable Growers, Fremont, Mich.

"It is the King of Sprinklers; beats everything in the watering line."
J. B. ADAMS, Pass Christian, Miss.

"We are better pleased every day. A boy can do better work with it than a good man can with a hose. It is the only way to water lettuce."
R. T. DONNELL, Springfield, Ill.

"As a time-saver, in my estimation there is nothing to equal it and no one realizing its value will be without the Wittbold system."
WM. EDLEFSEN, Milwaukee, Wis.

"Your system in our Rose house works so well we want to equip five more houses. The labor and hose saved will in a short time pay for the system."
KLEHM'S NURSERIES, Arlington Heights, Ill.

"It won't be long before it will be universally used."
ALOIS FREY, Head Gardener, Lincoln Park, Chicago.

"The Wittbold system is a great success with us, a great labor-saver and certain to be used all over the country in less than no time."
R. G. RAU, Florist and Supt. of Parks, St. Joseph, Mo.

EVERY GROWER WILL USE A WITTBOLD MACHINE as soon as he becomes familiar with the good work it does and saving it effects. Send $5.00 for a Swivel Wheel and twenty ⅛-inch Nozzles, which will be enough for 100 feet of system. It will be the best investment you ever made. JUST A MINUTE: that's how long it will take to water an entire house. Send today.

Comet Tomato

Those who force tomatoes should give "Comet" a trial. This variety has been the talk of gardeners around Boston the past season. Those who have seen it growing declare there's nothing to compare with it. Seed, $5.00 per oz.

that it shall never touch the edge of the pan containing the sulphur and observe every precaution to keep the sulphur from becoming ignited. Burning sulphur in an inclosure containing living plants is certain death to all plants contained in the area. The distillation of sulphur by keeping it in a molten condition over a sand bath is perfectly harmless to the plants, but is destructive to parasitic fungi like lettuce mildew and cucumber mildew.

The melon aphis, which is frequently troublesome upon cucumbers under greenhouse conditions, can be controlled by spraying the plants with whale-oil soap or kerosene emulsion. Under ordinary conditions a treatment with one of the commercial smudges of nicotine will usually be sufficient.

NEMATODES.

I enclose five kernels taken from a large tomato plant. Whatever these are caused a specie of dry rot. I could not find a worm of any kind. Can you tell me what is the matter? S. J. P.

Your plants are infected by a nematode, the work of a minute insect which cannot be seen without the aid of a powerful microscope. Sterilizing of the soil is the only certain preventive, though you may be able to procure soil free from it. To check it in the meantime keep your plants as much as possible on the dry side and use air-slaked lime freely, stirring into the soil so that it can be washed down when water has to be applied. W. S. CROYDON.

The Market.

The market in cut flowers for Thanksgiving was remarkably better this year than in preceding years. Roses are in more demand now and stock looks fairly well for this time of the year. With most of the growers carnations still remain a little short in stem and rather scarce.

Various Notes.

Mr. Blechschmid, of Miles avenue, has his carnations in fine order. He disposes of all his stock at wholesale.

G. M. Naumann had a nice lot of chrysanthemums. He also has a house of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine that is unexcelled in Cleveland. His place is well kept.

A visit to S. N. Pentecost's place revealed everything in the best of order. He has a big batch of poinsettias that are looking fine.

Visitor: A. F. Longren, of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill. N.

Here is what he says: "I like your new nozzles fine. The money you have to my credit you may send me in the No. 2 Improved Greenhouse Nozzles. Thanking you for your liberal business dealings, I am, yours truly, STEPHEN HYDE, Carthage, Mo., November 22, 1906."

The accompanying illustration shows the

READ WHAT OTHER GROWERS SAY

These letters have not before been published.

"I installed your system in one house last fall and have been much pleased with it. I find it does very good work and is a great time-saver. I intend to put the system into five more of my houses as soon as I can find the time to do so and may as well give you the order now."—M. ERNEST MOORE, Arlington, Mass., Dec. 2, 1906.

"We are very much pleased with the work your system does. We find our 20-barrel tank thirty feet high gives us all the pressure we need to spray two lines 200 feet long at once. We use in each line 1½-inch pipe for 100 feet and 1-inch for 100 feet and the working is perfect. We put the nozzles thirty-three inches apart. Please send us 100 more nozzles and three taps and fittings to complete everything."—C. R. BOWEN, Toledo, O., Nov. 28, 1906.

"Your nozzles with the improvement are all right. I have my new line laid in the greenhouses and they all work very satisfactorily. I have had no trouble at all with them and the system works fine."—GEO. F. HARTUNG, Sandusky, O., Dec. 6, 1906.

"Your new greenhouse nozzle is a great improvement over the old nozzle and we are well pleased with them. As we have your offer to change the old ones for new ones, please send us 425 of the new ones and we will return the old ones with the difference in price as soon as we can get the new ones in."—CHAS. MOBIUS, West Toledo, O., Dec. 7, 1906.

"Our last experiments with your system have proved quite successful and must even say that they were in every respect satisfactory. We have, therefore, decided to use your system on a larger scale and would request that you forward us at your earliest convenience 900 outdoor nozzles No. 1, 100 indoor nozzles, No. 3, the drilling machine, 12 special fittings and 12 tap drills."—THE HAERENS CO., Somergem, Belgium, Sept. 6, 1906.

That the Skinner System has been a success in the greenhouses is shown by the fact that in one place, Toledo, Ohio, twelve growers have installed it. The Skinner System has won its way on its own merits. Every installation always brings others from that section.

The Skinner System can be installed during the winter when there is plenty of time, and in the spring when rushed with outside work you will not have to stop to water the greenhouses.

Let me refer you to some one in your section that is using my system.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE seed stores which handle Christmas supplies report brisk trade and a bright outlook.

THE question of beet seed is important. Many of the best selling sorts are in short supply.

MRS. E. V. HALLOCK, wife of the well-known seedsman of Queens, L. I., died December 8.

THE shortage of the canning varieties of peas is still a source of annoyance to those who were sure that plenty would be harvested.

BEANS are moving in and out in better shape at present and those who have been complaining about delayed deliveries are better satisfied.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in the paper on "Sports" in another part of this issue. It is by Patrick O'Mara, manager of the plant department of Peter Henderson & Co.

THE Montgomery Blue Grass Seed Co., of Mt. Sterling, Ky., composed of I. F. Tabb, M. O. Cockrell and J. M. Bigstaff, has completed arrangements for the erection of a fireproof warehouse.

THE onion seed pages of some of the seed catalogues are reported to be off the press. It would be a source of gratification to those who are still holding their copy if they who have prices printed would let them out.

DAMMANN & CO., at San Giovanni, near Naples, say in an insert in their new wholesale price list of Italian grown seeds: "The heavy and prolonged rain of ashes which fell here in April last, during the outbreak of Mount Vesuvius, destroyed many crops around the volcano, while another part of them suffered considerably. As to ourselves, we have on the whole been fortunate enough, as only part of the early sowings in the autumn of 1905 and spring of 1906 have suffered. In consequence several crops are somewhat short this season, and several articles will likely be exhausted sooner than usual."

IT is said that market gardeners are already on the lookout for their next season's seed supplies. It is rather early for them to be anxious about this matter, but the talk of a scarcity of dependable stocks of seeds needed in their business has reached them.

VILMORIN, ANDRIEUX & CO., Paris, France, have named a chrysanthemum for Mrs. Lem W. Bowen, of Detroit, daughter of D. M. Ferry and wife, manager of the Ferry business. It is the color of the gold Ferry pays the venerable French house for seeds in such goodly annual quantities.

The fact that it is off several points in grades and of little use for the purpose for which it is recommended does not prevent the brokers who are pushing it from getting orders. growers of seed would confine themselves to soliciting trade from legitimate handlers of their product, instead of cutting loose and selling to any one who will buy, regardless of his knowledge of what is what, things would probably be in better condition.

THE German seeds are now coming forward.

IMPORTED mistletoe is worth $8 to $10 a case in New York.

THERE were 800 bags of German sugar beet seeds on the Graf Waldersee, reaching New York December 7.

BERG & SMALLEY, McPherson, Kan., are buyers and shippers of seed corn, alfalfa, millet, cane, Kaffir corn, barley, etc.

T. LEE ADAMS, 417 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., deals in grass seeds and agricultural seeds, turnips being something of a specialty. Add him to your lists.

THE stockholders of the Thompson Seed Co., Albert Lea, Minn., have again changed their minds and appointed D. R. P. Hibbs trustee to close out the business.

A SEED laboratory is to be established under charge of W. C. McKillican, at Calgary, Manitoba, for the purpose of testing the purity and vitality of farm seeds.

THE market gardeners in the vicinity of Peoria, Ill., have formed an organization to seek to regulate local supply. It is asserted that a glutted market caused them to lose all profit last season.

THE pickers in the employ of John H. Allan Seed Co., Sturgeon Bay, Wis., finished their work November 28, when the large force of girls was laid off. This is about two months earlier than usual, notwithstanding the output of peas is greater. This is accounted for by the fact that the crop was much cleaner than ever before.

THE prices on the turnip-shaped radishes in the wholesale lists are not what reports of complete failure of the French crops would lead us to expect.

A PUBLICATION which will interest many seedsmen is Bulletin No. 48, of the Bureau of Statistics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, entitled "The Cost of Producing Farm Crops." It deals only with conditions in Minnesota.

J. BOLGIANO & SONS, Baltimore, recently displayed a sample of their Savoy spinach at their store. It weighed twelve ounces, was one foot seven inches in diameter and three feet seven inches in circumference, grown by one of their customers in Baltimore county.

THE fight on free seeds will be hotter than ever at this session of congress; in fact, almost as hot as the Long Island bonfire in which H. Beaulieu saw 10,000 government packets blazing merrily. A number of packets were saved from the burning and now are on exhibition in Washington.

T. J. Smith is manager of the Grand Forks Seed Co., Grand Forks, S. D.

J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York, call attention to the fact that their preliminary trade list, dated November 20, was the first one out this season.

The J. J. Bell Seed Co., Deposit, N. Y., has a Brown bag-filling machine in operation in the store of Putnam & Son, where it attracts no little attention.

An indication that seeds are short is the comparative ease with which advance orders for the coming spring are being booked daily by the travelers for the larger houses; and it should be remembered that these future orders are being taken at higher prices than have prevailed for a long time.

Congressmen defeated for re-election will still have a chance to vote on 1908 appropriation bills and, since they have nothing at stake the anti-free seeds forces should gain some recruits. James W. Wadsworth, active in the last fight on free seeds, was one of those who went down in the November election.

In England a law has been enacted making it criminal to give a gardener a fee or commission on purchases for his employer. HARRY L. HOLMES.

As Harry L. Holmes says, it is twenty-eight years since he first germinated in the seed business, in Philadelphia, under the tutelage of a live stock dealer who sold seeds in a small way. It was in 1895 that Mr. Holmes started in business for himself, as the Holmes Seed Co., at Harrisburg, Pa. This is the characteristic way he tells of his start:

Harry L. Holmes.

"I wrote a party in Harrisburg, before renting there, asking him what he thought about the seed business for the locality. He replied that he considered it all right, provided we took fruit as a side line. I thought it over carefully and decided to sell seeds and let the other fellow sell the fruit. In October, 1895, we started business in a modest little store. My first customer was my landlord, who purchased 40 cents' worth of bulbs. I did not know whether he was afraid of not securing his rent or not, but he was kind and did not push me hard. The room measured 20x38, including the office, and resembled our first store in Philadelphia. We then bought a horse—this goes with the business, or at least I thought so, until I found that it was not an asset. We used to drive him over the country in will allow these plants to run to seed in order to obtain the greatest possible yield, no matter the quality. Fortunately, for the reputation of the trade, there are those who use all means possble to ensure the eradication of plants of an untrue type from their seed crops. Our methods of selection are no secret. Any firm can apply them if they care to go to the trouble and expense, which, we may say, is no inconsiderable item. We have stock seed of swede which cost us nearly $25 per pound, when all expenses are considered, and other things of an equally costly nature."

In their novelty list for November, 1906, W. W. Johnson & Co., Boston, England, have this to say of the importance of selection:

THE FIGHT IS ON.

The Washington representative of the Wholesale Seedmen's League sent out a call for the gathering of the clans at the national capital yesterday, Wednesday, December 12, and arranged for the seed trade to appear before the house committee on agriculture to make formal protest against the government seed distribution. Last year the committee omitted the paragraph providing funds for this work, and it was inserted on the floor of the house by a vote of 153 to 83, after a debate which ran nearly a week.

One of the strongest objections made to the omission of the item was that the committee had acted without any one appearing before it to object to the distribution. This was explained by the fact that although the seed dealers had objected to the distribution for many years, they had no intimation that the committee would take action on the subject, and therefore did not appear before it. When the point was raised it was, of course, too late to make representations to the house committee, but a large delegation appeared before the senate committee, and as a result of that hearing it reported that a distinct majority was opposed to the plan of free seed distribution and hoped at this session to be able to make a satisfactory change. In order that those opposed to free seeds shall have an opportunity to present their case to the house committee on agriculture, that committee granted them a hearing on December 12, at which the entire matter was very carefully gone into.

A large and representative delegation was on hand to lend the weight of its presence to the arguments of the gentlemen who addressed the committee. The arguments had been carefully correlated, so that effective work was done.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 12.—The anti-free-seed hearing before the house committee on agriculture today was attended by Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va., president of the American Seed Trade Association; W. Atlee Burpee, William Henry Maule and Walter P. Stokes, of Philadelphia; Alexander Forbes and Patrick O'Mara, of Peter Henderson & Co., New York; Henry B. Hathaway, Rochester; C. F. Wood, Louisville, Ky.; F. W. Bolgiano and other Washington and Baltimore seedsmen. The hearing was not completed and will be resumed tomorrow, Thursday morning.

VALLEY PIPS.

The valley pips are about all in for this year. The last boat had 614 cases, making a total to date of 4,278. The last consignments were as follows:

New Varieties for 1907

Vick's Sunset. Companion to Daybreak and Purity; in color a delicate pink shading to a deep rich pink in center. Profuse bloomer. Price per packet, 25c; 2 pkts., 40c.

Vick's Upright. Long, graceful stems branch out at the ground and grow directly upward. Flowers are symmetrical, double and full to the center. Splendid for cutting. Especially valuable for shipping. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

Vick's Royal Purple. An offshoot from the Branching. Unlike its parent, it sends out stems close to the ground. A medium early variety but lasting until late in fall. Nearly every stem produces specimen flowers. Price per packet, 20c; 2 packets, 35c.

Vick's Branching Rosy Carmine. A new color in the Branching class. Leading florists pronounce it a shade which will be popular with the trade. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

Vick's Cardinal. The best bedding Aster ever introduced. A good one for cutting. With its profusion of flowers and brilliant coloring it makes a handsome showing. Price per packet, 25c; 2 packets, 40c.

As we would like to know where you saw this adv., please mention the Florists' Review when you write.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending December 7 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Val.	Kind.	Bags.	Val.
Anise	157	$ 1,608	Grass	40	$ 609
Canary	1,200	2,332	Hemp	400	3,583
Caraway	400	2,698	Millet	200	511
Card'mom	6	147	Mustard	500	3,979
Castor	340	1,620	Poppy	850	4,271
Celery	25	395	Rape	197	1,556
Clover	1,352	33,966	Sugar b.	856	5,900
Cum'n	227	2,531	Other		3,373

In the same period the imports of plants, bulbs, etc., were of the aggregate value of $36,259.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

The weather throughout most seed-growing districts of England and on the continent has been favorable. The lands are in good condition for planting the usual autumn articles in the way of turnips, etc., and this work is nearing a successful finish.

In flower seeds, pansies are showing a considerable shortage and it is now practically certain that there will not be an average crop of aster and the quality will again be none too good. The new variety, Hohenzollern, is much in favor. Some English market growers describe it as the finest market aster yet introduced and some good sales are reported. It is probable an advance in price on this variety is close at hand. Fortunately it is a sort that harvests seed in several districts and I have lately had brought to my notice equally good samples of seed from four European countries.

Sweet peas are not in many districts producing a good crop, but this will not matter much; rather the reverse, as the acreage grown was too large for the demand and had there been a heavy crop a disastrous glut would have been inevitable. Not that the popularity of sweet peas has decreased; on the other hand, the demand steadily increases, and especially does this apply to the newer and standard exhibition sorts; but it was very certain the supply as far as acreage goes increased very much quicker than the demand.

Something has gone wrong with the palm seed trade. A big drop in price has occurred and some low quotations are to hand, even as low as 8 shillings per 1,000 for guaranteed new seed of kentias, and an antipodean firm is offering even as low as 4 shillings per 1,000.

The growth of hardy perennial, biennial and annual flower seeds is considerably on the increase in the eastern counties of England and on the occasion of my recent visit to some of the Essex seed farms I was shown some exceptionally fine samples of such things as candytuft, wallflower, etc., and some good samples of the herbaceous perennial class. The grower informed me that they are able to get a somewhat better sample and of stronger growth than from some of the continental seed-growing districts and a growing export trade to various European countries was being done. Sweet peas and nasturtiums are a big feature in Essex, being grown by the many acres, and some of the finest qualities of seed are obtained. B. J.

OPERATIONS OF THE CANNERS.

The U. S. census of manufactures for 1905 makes the following totals of the operations of the canning industry:

	Cases.	Value.
Tomatoes	9,301,264	$13,885,169
Corn	11,209,397	15,952,066
Peas	4,694,492	7,928,791
Beans	2,517,549	3,972,332
Other vegetables	1,650,588	3,523,790
Totals	29,373,290	$45,262,148

It would appear that the increased attention paid to the canners by many seed houses is fully justified, for the value of the vegetables canned has on the face of these returns nearly doubled in the last five years.

RAWSON'S NEWPORT BEAUTY STOCK

INTRODUCED BY US IN 1906.

is the earliest, largest and most exquisite colored stock for winter forcing that has ever been introduced. Habit, foliage and color of flowers are entirely distinct from any other strain. The highest praise has been bestowed upon it by those who grew it this past season.

If wanted for Easter, seed should be sown in December. The above strain produces 90 per cent double flowers, the highest percentage of any strain. The following varieties:

Marguerite, pure white.....1-32 oz., 75c
Faust, most exquisite pink.....1-32 oz., 75c
Valentine, delicate lavender.....1-32 oz., 75c
Mephistopheles, fiery red.....1-32 oz., 75c

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Cold, wet, snowy weather has been our lot for the past week. Mums can still be had in reasonable quantity, and there will be a fair supply for Christmas of Nonin, Maud Dean, White Bonnaffon and yellow; also Murdock. As a rule all varieties have run about two weeks later than in previous seasons.

Carnations are scarce, particularly red; white is in the best supply. Roses are equal to all demands, except for Beauties. Paper Whites, Romans and stevia are plentiful.

Out-of-town demand keeps stock not only cleaned up, but carnations scarce, and the size of orders is increasing almost daily, making certain of an extra heavy holiday demand, causing the growers to wonder whether they can fill orders in full, while roses will be pretty near to equaling the demand it is certain that carnations will be very short. There will be a nice lot of poinsettias to help out. In pot plants there will be azaleas, poinsettias, Romans, peppers, primroses and cyclamens.

J. A. Creelman has resigned from the management of Chas. Chadwick's flower store, and goes to Los Angeles, Cal., where he has two brothers in business. Mrs. Chadwick has temporarily assumed the management. G. F. C.

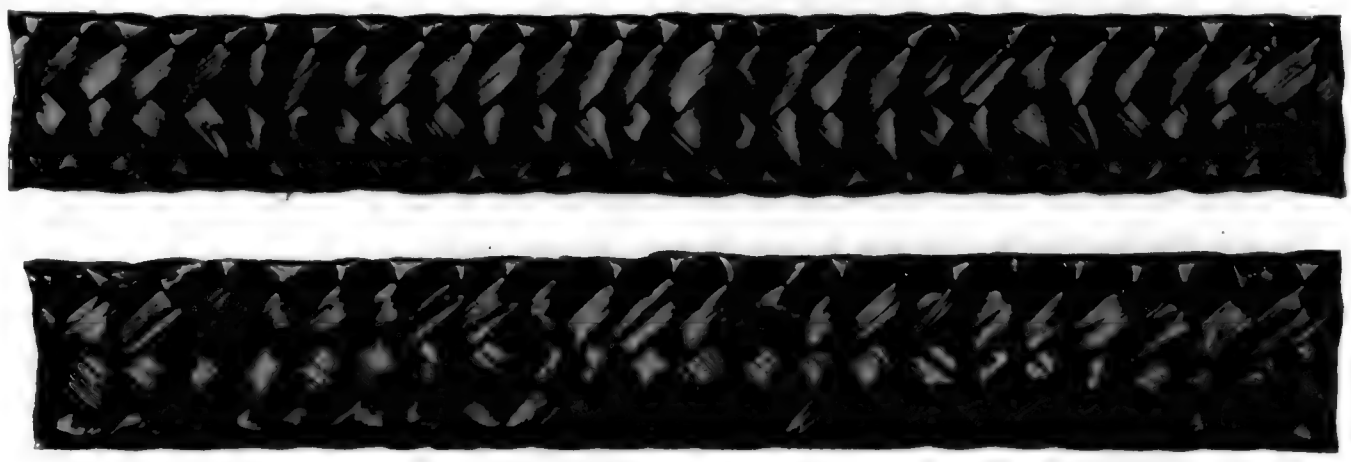
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Trade conditions are not as good as they might be. An absence of sufficient funeral work to use up stock, coupled with the people busy preparing for Christmas, has been the cause of stock dragging somewhat. Prices, however, have kept up. Carnations bring from $3 to $5 and roses $3 to $7. Chrysanthemums are about all in with the exception of pink, and they are hard to move. Violets fail to move, the weather having been too cold for one thing. However, from now on trade will no doubt improve. Thanksgiving business with G. B. Hart, our wholesale florist, eclipsed all records and he was more than satisfied with the results. He is now handling some exceptionally fine Kentia Belmoreana, which have been pronounced the finest stock ever seen in this city.



C. H. Vick attended the funeral of his brother, the late James Vick, in Philadelphia.

Herbert Greensmith paid a flying visit to this city last week to see his old friends. He is now engaged in Black Hall, Conn., growing herbaceous stock on a large scale. H. B. S.

WE consider the REVIEW the best trade paper.—COVINGTON SEED CO., Covington, Ky.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held December 7. The annual election resulted in the choice of the following officers: President, Wm. J. Bennett, gardener for A. C. Van Gasbeek; vice-president, Arthur T. Caparn, superintendent of the estate of Stewart Hartshorne; secretary, Henry Halbig, gardener for George Graves; treasurer, William Read, gardener for S. & A. Colgate.

MILWAUKEE.

Club Election.

At the regular meeting of the Milwaukee Florists' Club, December 9, the annual election of officers was held. John G. Heitman was re-elected president. The other officers elected are: Vice-president, Chas. Burmeister; secretary, C. Dalwig; treasurer, Nic. Zweifel; trustee, C. Valom.

The meeting was largely attended and refreshments were served after the election.

Various Notes.

Flowers in this vicinity have been scarce in the last week. The continuous dark weather has kept the supply down exceptionally low and prices ruled high in nearly all lines, except stevia, of which the market is overstocked. On account of the shortage of flowers at this time there appears to be a very early demand for Christmas plants and the supply in sight is about cleaned up. The German market, which was the headquarters for plants of all descriptions in former years, is a thing of the past. This building is now occupied by one of the brewing concerns and all florists had to vacate. However, they all found quarters in the neighborhood.

Quite a quantity of holly is already in the city and some of the commission merchants are handling it in large quantities. There is no bouquet green in bulk in the market. There is a limited amount of wreathing to be had.

Unless there is some improvement in the weather before Christmas there will be quite a shortage of flowers.

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 35 cents

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Propagation of Plants.

By ANDREW S. FULLER. Illustrated with numerous engravings. Describing the process of hybridizing and crossing and also the many different modes by which cultivated plants may be propagated and multiplied. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50

The Rose—Its Cultivation, Varieties, etc.

By H. B. ELLWANGER. Directions for cultivation—for planting, pruning, propagation, the treatment of diseases and insect enemies—particularly valuable for its classification. Alphabetical and descriptive list of nine hundred and fifty-six varieties. Cloth. $1.25

Greenhouse Construction.

By PROF. L. R. TAFT. A complete manual on the building, heating, ventilating and arrangement of greenhouses, and the construction of hotbeds, frames and plant pits. Lucid descriptions and 118 diagrams and illustrations make every detail clear to the amateur and professional gardener and florist. Cloth. 218 pages. $1.50

Gardening for Pleasure.

By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the amateur in the fruit, vegetable and flower garden, with full directions for the greenhouse, conservatory and window garden. Technical terms and phrases professional gardeners use in writing or speaking on matters relating to horticulture have been avoided as far as possible. 404 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Gardening for Profit.

By PETER HENDERSON. The standard work on market and family gardening. The successful experience of the author for more than thirty years, and his willingness to tell, as he does in this work, the secret of his success for the benefit of others, enables him to give most valuable information. The book is profusely illustrated. 376 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Mushrooms—How to Grow Them.

By WM. FALCONER. This is the most practical work on the subject ever written, and the only book on growing mushrooms published in America. The author describes how he grows mushrooms and how they are grown for profit by the leading market gardeners, and for home use by the most successful private growers. Engravings drawn from nature expressly for this work. Cloth. $1.00

The History and Culture of Grafted Roses for Forcing.

By ALEX. MONTGOMERY, JR. The most important contribution to the modern literature of the rose. Of much interest to every rose grower and of utmost value to growers of grafted roses. Containing practical description of the process of grafting with full details of planting and culture; also directions for treatment to carry the plants a second year. 25 cents

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.

By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result o 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

The Dahlia.

By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

Practical Floriculture.

By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the successful propagation of florists' plants. A detailed account of the requisites to success and a clear explanation of imoroved methods. For the amateur and professional florist. 325 pages. Cloth. Postpaid. $1.50

The Forcing Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. In this work the author has compiled in handy form the cream of all the available information on the subject of forcing vegetables under glass. In addition to this, the experience of many practical growers in different localities is furnished. $1.00

Vegetables Under Glass.

By HENRY A. DREER. This is an up-to-date review of money-making winter work within the reach of everybody. It describes the ways of successful market gardeners near Philadelphia and Boston, and gives pictures of frames, forcing houses and various horticultural devices. 25 cents

The Chrysanthemum.

By ARTHUR HERRINGTON, formerly president of Chrysanthemum Society of America. The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. 50 cents

Cabbage, Cauliflower and Allied Vegetables.

By C. L. ALLEN. An explanation of the requirements, conditions, cultivation and general management pertaining to the entire cabbage group. The chapter on seed raising is probably the most authorative treatise on this subject ever published. Insects and fungi are given due attention. Illustrated. 128 pages. Cloth. 50 cents

The Water Garden.

By WILLIAM TRICKER. Embracing the construction of ponds, adapting natural streams, planting, hybridizing, seed saving, propagation, building an aquatic house, wintering, correct designing and planting of banks and margins, together with cultural directions for all ornamental aquatics. Profusely illustrated with nine plates, eighteen full page descriptive views, and numerous other sketches in the text. Large octavo. Cloth. $3.00

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth, 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.

By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. Sc. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.

By PETER HENDERSON. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $4.00

Greenhouse Management.

By PROF. L. R. TAFT, of Michigan Agricultural College. A manual for florists and flower lovers on the forcing of flowers, vegetables and fruits in greenhouses, and the propagation and care of house plants. It treats of all the plants commonly cultivated by florists and amateurs, and explains in a thorough manner the methods that have been found most successful in growing them. Particular attention is paid to the growing of cut flowers, the growing of fruits under glass, etc. Of special value will be the directions for treating plants when attacked by insects and fungi. The preparation of the soil, the use of various manures, composts and fertilizers, watering, ventilating and heating receive careful and minute attention. Cloth. 400 pages. $1.50

Headquarters Building of a Portland Rose Farm.

PACIFIC COAST.

M. V. BROWN, Los Angeles, Cal., has sold his interest in the nursery business to M. L. Helsel and will start east in a few days to spend the winter.

ROSE GROWING IN OREGON.

Horticulture in Oregon is a vastly different proposition from the same vocation in the east. Climatic conditions are entirely at variance and the country is new, so that demand is just beginning to be felt in full force. Portland is known as the rose city of Oregon, but rose culture there is in the open, not under glass. The accompanying illustration shows a typical establishment, that of G. Indermuhle, located only two miles from the business center of the city. The headquarters building is a decidedly unpretentious affair viewed through eastern eyes, but it suffices for the conduct of a prosperous and constantly increasing business. The outdoor view shows the nursery stock, two acres being given to roses. In the foreground are the bush plants in a large number of varieties and in the background the climbing roses, and beyond that other lines of decorative stock. The soil and climate are particularly adapted to roses and in the five years since he began to clear this land Mr. Indermuhle has been making steady progress.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had a touch of colder weather for the last week and flowers are in shorter supply in consequence. Business has been good since Thanksgiving and the prospects are favorable for its continuance. We are badly in need of rain, and until it arrives there will be little in the line of outside stock. Violets are even scarcer this week than they were last, and there is nothing that will make them plentiful unless it is a good downpour. Bulbous stock is likewise scarce, and for the same reason. Outside chrysanthemums are getting poorer in quality and beginning to show the results of the continued cold weather.

Inside stock with most of the growers is in good shape, and there is but little scarcity in either roses or carnations. The prices obtained, however, have had a decided upward tendency, especially for fancy stock. They are fully 50 per cent higher than those of two weeks ago, and I do not anticipate that they will get any cheaper for some time. Good adiantum and smilax are not so plentiful, and great quantities of wild ferns and other kinds of greens are being used instead. Valley, which has only been in light supply this season, is becoming much more in evidence, as some of our largest growers are commencing to cut heavily. Inside mums are almost out of season. A few good Mrs. Jerome Jones and Bonnaffons are being brought into town by the Japanese growers, but they are in short supply.

The indications for holiday trade are good. There is much inquiry from prospective buyers, and all the dealers anticipate a heavy rush in a couple of weeks.

Various Notes.

The retailers are making considerable complaint that the growers have been shipping too many flowers to out-of-town customers, so that they have not been able to get sufficient stock to fill orders. The growers maintain that they have been forced to dispose of a majority of their stock in the country all summer and autumn and they will hereafter turn quite as much attention to interior dealers as to the florists in the city. One of the largest growers in California, situated within a few miles of San Francisco, has not sold a blossom in this town since the fire, whereas, before that eventful time, he did no shipping whatever. The fact of the matter is that the growers did not realize what a big field there was until a demand was created in our nearby towns, and this accounts for the attention shipping orders now receive.

The Holland Nursery Co., of Elmhurst, is in with a heavy crop of valley. This firm makes a specialty of this article and has success invariably with it.

The coming fiesta in Oakland has had the effect of a great many orders for garlands and other decorations being placed with the florists.

Domoto Bros. are receiving large consignments of Japanese stock on every steamer. They report trade in that line good.

James Skinner is offering to the trade a lot of mammoth kentia palms just received from Belgium. They arrived in splendid condition.

Charles Carpenter has left on a week's duck hunting. G.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Trade has been running at a good brisk gait and everybody is wearing a satisfied smile. Another cause for gratification is the excellent quality of everything coming into the market. This last remark we intend as a bouquet for the growers, who certainly are making great advance in their respective lines. There are none too many carnations and violets, the last named tempting more customers than any other flower. The rose supply is ample and the color grand. It has been said that good roses could not be grown in Portland during the rainy season, but this is the twentieth century.

Chrysanthemums have held the lofty position to which they are entitled and their value in dollars has not diminished. The fine blooms of Timothy Eaton and Col. Appleton seen at Clarke Bros.' store were unanimously given the blue ribbon by all the florists. This firm were fortunate in having a big supply of these for Thanksgiving trade, which was the best on record. Perfect weather and the great annual football event created a demand that cleaned us out at four o'clock, when we were ready to go home and do justice to the turkey. On Friday, November 30, the Evening Telegram published a vivid account of the enormous business done and cartooned us as on our way to the bank with the proceeds.

Various Notes.

Two weeks ago we were given a surprise by the information that the long established firm of Martin & Forbes had dissolved partnership by mutual consent, Mr. Forbes retiring. By close application and industry these young men have built up a profitable business, and Mr. Forbes' name may now be listed among those of the Portland capitalists. After a few weeks' rest in California he will return either to open a bank or finance one of our new railroads!

We had the pleasure last week of meeting Mr. Phillips, of the Phillips Floral Co., of Walla Walla, Wash., who was here calling on the craft and incidentally making arrangements for the publication of his latest book of poems. Mr. Phillips is optimistic in regard to trade in his locality and is preparing to add 20,000 feet more glass to his range.

Regular visitors from up the Willamette valley are, Tony Le Grande and Julius Broetje, of Milwaukee, bringing miscellaneous stuff; Charlie Street, of Clackamas, who is having his usual success with violets and, we may add, greater success with roses than heretofore, cutting some fine Brides, Maids and Richmonds; and Sam Roake, of Oregon City, popularly known as the green goods man, on whom we largely depend for our supply of common ferns and Oregon grape.

SANTA ROSA, CAL.

A number of nurserymen from Oregon and Washington visited Santa Rosa December 3, coming to see Luther Burbank and to visit the celebrated Vroman walnut orchard. The nuts from this famous orchard have all been sold to the Oregon nurserymen. The visitors were entertained by the Chamber of Commerce. President Moody, of the Chamber of Commerce, and Luther Burbank made addresses of welcome, which were responded to by A. McGill, of Salem, for the Oregonians, and by C. A. Tonneson, of Tacoma, for the Washingtonians.

EUCALYPTUS FOR TIES.

An article in a recent number of the Review contained a statement regarding the lasting qualities of the eucalyptus. I wish to know from what authority the statement was obtained. I desire to invest a portion of my salary in land for the purpose of growing timber, ties, poles and firewood. Do Eucalyptus rostrata and Eucalyptus crebra crack in drying?

C. A. M.

The fact that owing to the enormous consumption of wood in the western country and that railroad building is but yet in its incipiency and the required material getting scarcer each year has been called to the attention of those interested in a forcible manner. In consequence, considerable experimenting has been done at various places regarding the adaptability of several varieties of eucalyptus to the climatic conditions.

The ironbark and red gums have been used for years in Australia, both for telegraph poles and railroad ties, so that there was no risk whatever in using the wood for that purpose. In fact there is little else used for that purpose in that country in sections where the trees are to be had. This will dispose of the question as to its adaptability, and that there will be a tremendous demand for this timber, no one who has followed the gradual upward climb of the raw material can doubt. Lumber at the present time is forty per cent higher than it was two years ago. By this I mean ordinary redwood and pine. The former is the material used here for railroad work.

The Santa Fe railroad has wisely noted all of these facts, and the next proposition to face was to find a suitable location where the propagation could be carried on advantageously. There are plenty of places along the coast, in fact there are but few locations that either of the varieties of eucalyptus mentioned will not succeed. They want primarily the coast breezes and a fairly well sheltered situation. In the hot interior valleys they do not succeed so well. Provision must be made for their care for one year in flats, and after that for another season in the ground, before they can be said to be able to look out for themselves. They can be grown up to 1,000 trees to the acre with plenty of room to get between them, and the timber cut will be all the better in consequence.

Regarding the cracking of either the E. crebra and E. rostrata, there is little trouble with medium sized growths, especially if they are allowed to dry in the forest before they are hauled out in the sun. This is the modus operandi used where particular results are wanted, but there seems to be but little trouble on that score.

The length of time that these varieties will last under ground depends, as it does in the redwood, upon the condition of the soil and the wear and tear to which they are subjected. They seem to fill the bill perfectly, however, and if the Santa Fe railroad has discovered it profitable to engage in growing railroad ties, it seems very plausible that any one else may have as good success. EUPHORBIA.

Will you tell me whether there are any white poinsettias grown in California, and are all euphorbias poinsettias?

L. v. d. L.

The only variety of euphorbia called poinsettia is the well-known Euphorbia cherrima, a native of Mexico, hardy in southern California and the most valuable member of the family of Euphorbiaceae. None of the poinsettias are white, but other members of this extensive genus are white flowered and of considerable value medicinally and to the plantsman. The various kinds of spurge, wild ipecac, crotons, alcalphas and castor oil are all included. I have had considerable success with Euphorbia fulgens, which makes a good garden shrub, also the well-known Euphorbia splendens, either as a rock plant or grown as a pot plant; but the first named and most widely known has proven itself to be indispensable to the florist. NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

IRVING ROUSE, of Rochester, is en route home from a tour of English and Continental nurseries.

C. N. OLSTON, Brookings, S. D., has organized the Sioux Valley Nursery Co. A range of greenhouses is planned.

J. H. M. EDWARDS, a nurseryman of Logan, Ia., was a witness December 5 in the Nebraska land fraud cases on trial at Omaha.

GEORGE R. MOORE, president of the Chautauqua & Erie Grape Co., and of the village of Fredonia, N. Y., died December 2, aged 55 years.

THE storage house of the Ohio Nursery Co., Elyria, O., was pretty thoroughly demolished by the explosion of nine sticks of dynamite December 3.

THE big general mail order house of Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, shortly will be a considerable factor in the catalogue mail trade in nursery stock.

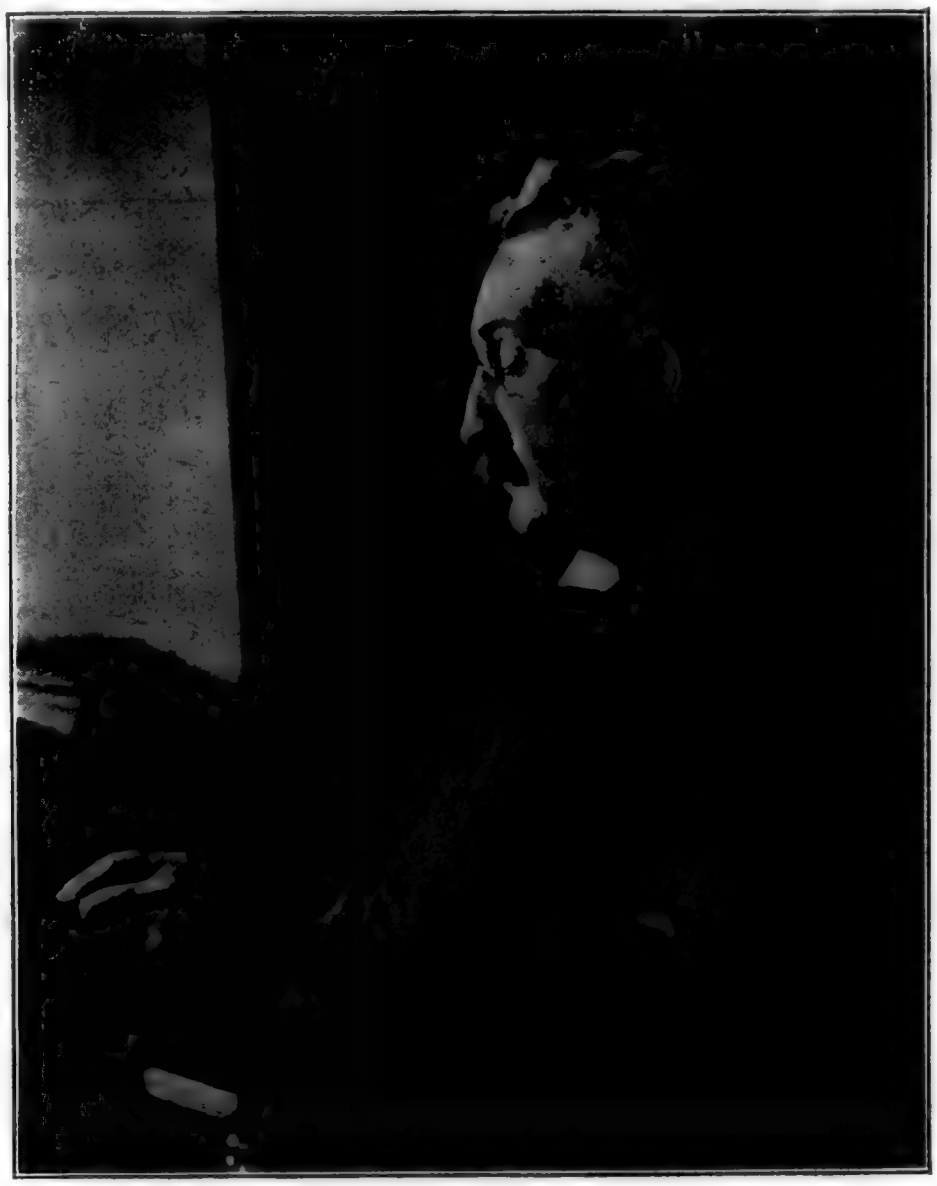
LAST week and this nearly every one of the state and local horticultural societies have held their winter meetings, and nurserymen have been active participants.

WITH the price of every other article higher than it has been in years, there is no good reason why the nurserymen should not realize better returns in the spring of 1907.

THE R. G. Chase Co. has removed its Philadelphia office to the headquarters at Geneva, N. Y. The management now is in the hands of G. M. Chase. H. M. Chase no longer is connected with the company.

THE Western Association of Nurserymen holds its semi-annual meeting at Kansas City next week, December 18 and 19. A larger attendance than usual is expected. Peter Youngers, Lincoln, Neb., is president.

A JURY at Geneva, N. Y., spent a day on a suit of the Western New York Nursery Co., J. E. Dale, proprietor, against Rice Bros., of Geneva, involving the value of 300 ¾-inch cherry trees, and rendered a judgment for $4.50.



THE fall season has only just closed in a number of localities and the aggregate of business done is in most instances well ahead of the best previous year; indeed, the deliveries by wholesale nurserymen as a rule are much the largest on record.

THE nurserymen of Utah, at their recent meeting at Salt Lake City, held a conference with the horticultural board and will organize at a meeting next month for the purpose of urging the state legislature to pass a bill licensing all nurserymen.

NURSERYMEN as a body have failed to appreciate the benefit to be derived by the whole trade from the press bureau of the National Council of Horticulture, which is shortly to begin its second season's work. The council has the confidence of editors as have few publicity organizations, for its literary offerings are of the safe and sane variety. The A. A. N. should get its help in countering the work of seedless apple propaganda.

THE Michigan peach growers who lost in the October freeze are a considerable factor in the market. Some of them require many thousands of trees for replanting.

John T. Lovett.

JOHN T. LOVETT.

John T. Lovett, of Little Silver, N. J., has been a factor in nurserydom in this country for over thirty years. His star is in the ascendant; he has triumphed over all misfortunes and obstacles. He will accomplish much in the future as the result of his persistency and courage. Walter Scott, at Abbottsford, would know just how to appreciate the conflict that has ended in success.

Mr. Lovett has over 200 acres devoted exclusively to nursery stock in great variety, except fruit trees, which have been eliminated that entire attention may be given to ornamentals. But an exception will be made in behalf of his first love, small fruit culture: currants, raspberries, blackberries, gooseberries and strawberries. Of the latter over a million plants are disposed of annually.

His range of glass is used exclusively for the propagating of herbaceous stock, of which his list shows over 1,000 varities. His specialties include over 150 varieties of phlox, forty varieties of Japanese iris, fifty varieties of peonies, and dahlias and cannas in abundance. His brother-in-law, through whom the Japanese selections were made, is Prof. C. C. Georgeson, now in charge of the U. S. government's agricultural experimental work in Alaska.

Mr. Lovett was the first nurseryman to introduce the California privet as a hedge plant, away back in 1873. He carries a stock of over a quarter of a million plants, one customer recently taking 120,000. He has just added thirty acres to his nursery and has twenty-five more ready for purchase.

His fruit farm at Clover Hill, Red Bank, five miles from Little Silver, has 166 acres in choice fruit, including 7,000 peach trees, 200 apples, 1,200 pears, 1,000 plums, 1,000 cherries and 1,000 chestnuts. Here, too, some of the finest poultry of all kinds are to be seen, squab, fancy fowls and turkeys being made a specialty, with experts in charge.

Mr. Lovett has a large family of boys and girls, most of whom are still at college or in art schools. His eldest son, Lester, is associated with him in the business. He is an able lieutenant, a fine manager and salesman, a member of the S. A. F. and of the New York Florists' Club. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

Kill Your Scale

If you want to kill Scale on your plants
Absolutely, there is only one preparation

WILSON'S PLANT OIL

Take a can of this preparation. dilute to four times its bulk with water, and wash or spray your palms, ferns, aspidistras, smilax or any plants subject to bugs or vermin and your plants will be clean. No alkali. Nothing deleterious. Dries at once.

READ WHAT OTHERS SAY OF IT:

RUTHERFORD, N. J., June 28, 1906.

We have thoroughly tried your Plant Oil with very striking results. We may say this is the first insecticide we have tried on our palms that will remove the scale with the first application. We would like to say this is one of the few things that the florists cannot afford to be without, especially those who are growing palms and decorative plants. After one application of the Oil the plants take on an entirely new appearance. We would be pleased to have prospective buyers visit our nurseries and inspect the palms on which we have used your oil.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Business the last week has been only fair. On account of Christmas being so near it has dropped off to some extent. Cut flower buyers are eidently busy with their Christmas shopping, and the florists cannot expect any particular rush until Christmas week.

Considerable holly and green are being handled in a wholesale way. The commission houses are doing quite a heavy holly business on account of the close prices they are quoting. Some nice holly was seen by the writer quoted at $3.75 per case, while the larger trade dealers are asking $4.75 and $5 per case. There is a vast difference in the quality, however. But the merchants seem to favor the commission houses, no doubt on account of the price. There is an exceptionally heavy demand for lycopodium and fair prices are obtained for it. From present prospects the shortage in this section is not so great as was at first anticipated. A great deal is being sold at $6.50 and $7 per crate. The orders from country points have started out quite strongly. The larger dealers each have from thirty to sixty girls busy making wreathing, which sells well at $4.75 and $5 per hundred yards. Christmas trees are arriving in carload lots, and the prominent vacant lots are beginning to fill up.

St. Paul.

The Swanson Floral Co. in future will be conducted by Gust A. Colberg and Alfred Lemke, Mr. Lemke having purchased Mr. Swanson's interest in the business. Mr. Colberg has just returned from Chicago, where he has been in search of Christmas novelties.

C. F. Vogt has been especially busy the last week making green and holly wreaths for the Christmas trade, which is heavy, especially on all green goods.

The Ramaley Floral Exchange has received a large consignment of Christmas trees which they will sell at retail only.

H. Krinke says trade has been fair and is making preparations for a large Christmas business.

L. L. May & Co. have a large force of girls making up wreathing. They handle a large quantity of green goods, supplying a large number of florists throughout the northwest. Felix.

Delphi, Ind. — Mrs. R. L. Higginbotham has discontinued business. There is a good opening in the town.

Williamsburg, Pa.—Walter S. Hood is the inventor of a new trellis which can be folded up or laid in a horizontal position without injuring the vine or plant entwined therein. It also combines a sprinkler and is so constructed that it can be readily moved from one place to another.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market last week was good. Since chrysanthemums are almost gone, the demand for them seems to increase. Pink varieties have been especially scarce. Chrysanthemums have been used more this season for funeral work than during any previous year. Carnations are scarce. Narcissi, Roman hyacinths and stevia are coming in more plentifully, and they help out in making up funeral designs especially. Roses are of good quality and find ready sale. American Beauties are scarce and much higher in price. Deutsche Pearl azaleas are making their appearance. All of the early varieties are showing color and will no doubt be ready in time for Christmas.

Indications are that carnations will not be plentiful for the holidays; they will be a little late with most of the growers. Poinsettias will be more plentiful this year. Several of the growers are raising a good many, and they are looking fine.

Although it is a little late to report for Thanksgiving, we will say that the trade on that day was dull. It rained nearly all day; consequently few buyers came out. Had it not been for the good sales that were made the day before it would have been almost a failure. We noticed that potted plants were more in demand than in previous years.

Various Notes.

Edward Tonquest, who was in Colorado last summer for his health, spent a few weeks here with friends, but returned last week to Canyon City, Colo.

G. P. Kaupp, from Nevada, Mo., spent a few days visiting the craft here. He says that his carnations are looking fine. He rebuilt his whole plant and now has a fine set of new houses. He also grows some fine lettuce, besides geraniums, of which he ships a good many to neighboring towns. Mr. Kaupp has been quite successful, and he has the best wishes of all the florists.

Samuel Murray, the Lorraine begonia king, has a house of the finest Gloire de Lorraines in the city. Some are in 10 and 12-inch pots. This is certainly a sight worth seeing.

E. C. Keck, from Washington, Ia., was in this city last week, visiting. He grows quite a lot of carnations, and was also looking for a new market to ship them to. W. H. H.

ELBERON, N. J.

At the regular meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society, December 3, great interest was taken in a new seedling carnation exhibited by Mr. Tierney, of Highlands of Navesink. After being judged in an able manner by Messrs. Grieb and Bauer it was awarded a certificate of merit, scoring ninety points. Mr. Tierney named it Mrs. Robert Hartshorne in honor of his employer's wife. There was also exhibited by Peter Murray a beautiful Phœnix Roebelenii, scoring ninety points. Carnations exhibited by A. Bauer scored ninety points. Stevia exhibited by A. Grieb scored eighty-five points and violets exhibited by Fred Dettlinger scored eighty-five points. A committee was appointed by the society to meet the board of education of Oakhurst to arrange to beautify the school grounds with shrubbery and whatever is required to put the grounds in good condition. The committee is Messrs. Robertson, Grieb and Dettlinger. After a few remarks by Herbert Hall the society adjourned.

NEWARK, N. Y.

Charles E. Clark started in a small way in the greenhouse business thirteen years ago. His first house was only 18x 24 feet. Now he is the proprietor of the Wallowdale greenhouses and fruit farm, and his success is assured by the fact that he finds a ready market at Buffalo, Rochester, Boston and many other cities.

Under his 5,000 feet of glass he propagates and grows the new and up-to-date varieties, his specialties being chrysanthemums, carnations and novelties in geraniums. Mr. Clark does not go in for a great variety of stock, preferring to confine himself mainly to certain specialties, and with these he has been eminently successful. In the spring he utilizes his greenhouses for growing early vegetables, and in flowers, vegetables and fruit he is considered quite an expert.

The greenhouses are of modern construction and this year Mr. Clark made some extensive changes and installed a new heating plant.

The New Pink Rose AURORA

...A Rose For Everybody...

This Rose is a seedling from Bon Silene and Souvenir du President Carnot. The flowers are large and full, and are produced on strong and stiff stems, with a rich dark green foliage. The color is a beautiful pink with a deeper shading in the center. The keeping quality of the flowers is excellent, and it does not lose its brilliancy of color when kept in the cellar. The habit of growth is strong and vigorous; it has absolutely no tendency to go dormant during the Winter and every shoot has a flower bud.

AURORA has inherited the productiveness of Bon Silene and has the free flowering qualities of this well known prolific variety. It is easy to grow, and does not need a high temperature.

Plants from 2½-inch pots, own roots; $30.00 per 100; 50 at 100 rate; $250.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate.

FAILURE WITH SWEET PEAS.

For the last three winters I have been growing sweet peas in Florida. The first winter I had fairly good success, but last winter and this season so far I have not been able to do a thing with them. After they get up out of the ground nicely they wither and die and upon examination I find the stem under the ground rots off. H. S. P.

To have the best success with sweet peas they must be sown while the weather is cool and before the ground has dried up much. In the northern states this is done as soon after the frost has left the ground as possible. It is necessary for the plants to make good roots before top growth commences. With later sowings, but indifferent success is, as a rule, the result. Quite rich ground is the best, that of a retentive or clayey nature being preferable, although we have seen splendid sweet peas in sandy loam. The seed should be well firmed by tamping and we prefer to hollow out the rows, saucer-like, to the depth of three or four inches to catch and retain moisture. Covering the seed three inches deep is about right. The practice followed still of covering the seed lightly at first and earthing up stems as they grow is liable to cause rot, especially if heavy rains occur just after the earthing up.

We have never had any success with sweet peas planted in the same land two or more successive years. Fresh ground each year should be used. Possibly the land contains too much potash. Do not use chemical fertilizers. Good, well-rotted barnyard manure is preferable. Run the rows north and south, sow thinly while the land is cool, mulch when dry weather sets in and we see no reason why they should not do well, even in southern Florida. W. N. C.

LEBANON, IND.—Oak Hill cemetery now has six complete and well equipped greenhouses. Five of the buildings are 20x64 and the sixth is 20x100 feet. There is also a boiler-house equipped with a fifty horse-power boiler. The houses built last year have been torn down.

TO CARNATION GROWERS!

Imperial and Pink Imperial Carnation

HERE are two good ones for you, the former the beautiful variegated delicate pink ground spotted with deeper pink, the latter a Lawson shade of pink and both fancy varieties. They are vigorous growers, no grass and every shoot produces a flower. The supply of cuttings will be limited. You cannot well afford to be without some stock of these two excellent varieties. They should and undoubtedly will prove a most valuable asset to our collection of desirable commercial carnations, and growers who would be up-to-date must not be without them. I have watched carefully these two varieties for some time, and can fully vouch for their excellence.

Cut Blooms may be seen at my place, 43 West 28th St. Enough said.

The first batch of rooted cuttings will be ready December 15, 1906. Place your orders now and be assured of supply for next season. For further particulars regarding these two excellent commercial carnations,

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

LOCKLAND RETIRING.

It is stated that the Lockland Lumber Co., of Lockland, O., has determined to withdraw from the business of manufacturing greenhouse building material. The company is one of the oldest and strongest in the United States. It was established in 1868 and has a capital of $150,000. E. R. Stearns is president and A. M. Stearns treasurer and manager. The manufacture of greenhouse material has been only a small department of the business, although a large quantity of material has been turned out. Sash, doors, blinds, boxes and other articles are the principal manufactures. E. Loeber has been the manager of the greenhouse department in the last few years. It is reported that he will continue to be connected with the greenhouse material business.

JOLIET, ILL.—G. Heinrich, of Crete, Ill., has rented his residence and greenhouse on Herman street to a man from Steger, who will conduct the business.

ONEONTA, N. Y.—C. E. Miles, who over a year ago bought out Mrs. Seymour Scott's residence and greenhouses, reports a steady growth in trade and is well pleased with the business.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The purchaser of August S. Swanson's interest in the Swanson Floral Co., doing business at 31 East Sixth street, is A. W. Lemke, son of E. F. Lemke, who is widely known in the trade. The firm will hereafter be known as Colberg & Lemke. They have an excellent location, a well established business and every prospect for a bright future.

New Single Geranium SYCAMORE

Bright, clear salmon-pink, cross between Mrs. E. G. Hill and Paul Bruant. Vigorous grower, of dwarf habit and a continuous bloomer. Trusses measure from 6 to 8 inches in diameter. Unexcelled as a bedder. Has been grown by us and thoroughly tested for the past 4 years. Write for descriptive circular. Orders booked now for 2½-in. pots at $2.00 per doz.; $15.00 per 100.
